County feuds brewing

BY ED LEPOMA

Neighbors are feuding with each other in separate areas of Hancock County, and their differences were aired Monday before the Hancock County Board of Supervisors.

In one instance, a resident of the Bayou Phillips Community off Hwy. 90 claims a deep pit dug by a dirt-selling firm has caused water tables to drop, and individual water wells are drying up.

And in another case, residents of Jourdan River Shores off Hwy. 603 are complaining about junk piling up on a lot off Chickasaw Street.

Martin DeSalvo, who lives on Harbor Drive, told supervisors that "Ever since (Joey) Boudin started digging out his land to sell the mud for profit, I know of three families losing water to their homes."

In July, DeSalvo said he called a plumber and "he said the water table dropped about eight feet."

DeSalvo said his water well and others in the area are about 100 feet deep, and his was sucking in sand and air.

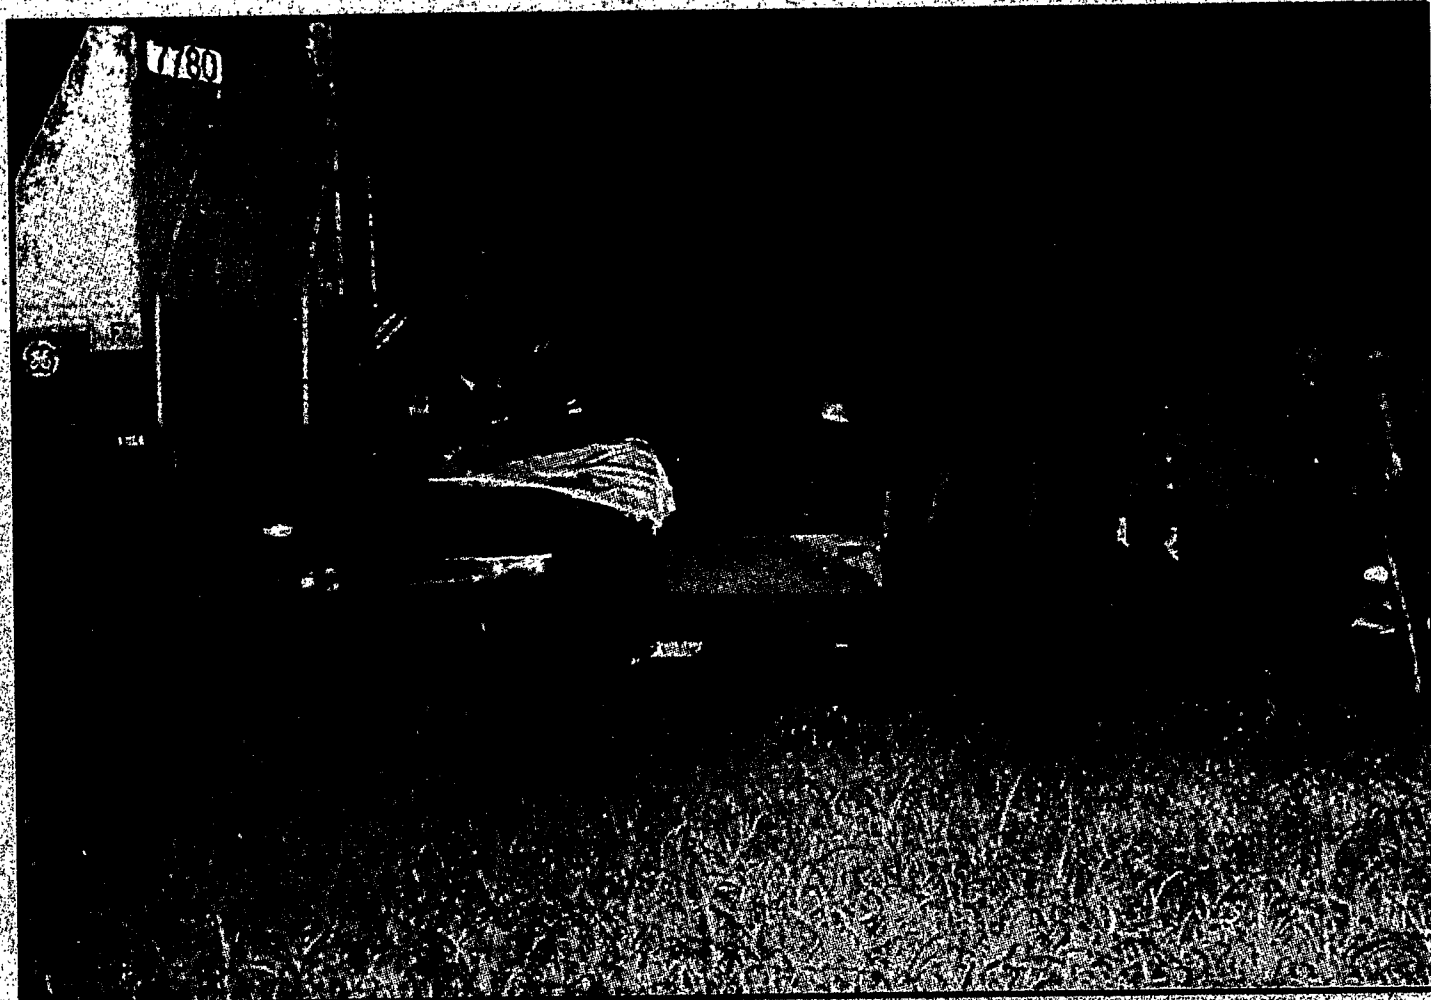

DeSalvo said it took him three days and cost him $200 to run his pipe deeper in order to get water, and he helped the other neighbors whose wells were also drying up.

Residents of Chickasaw Street have signed a petition to make neighbor clean his lot.

Train kills three

Emergency workers are on the scene late Saturday evening after three Bay St. Louis residents were killed at the Webb Street railroad crossing when their vehicle was struck by an oncoming train. The victims include the driver, 21-year-old Cecile F. Bilbo, and passengers Joseph Winingham and Sean Finegan. The incident is still under investigation by the Bay St. Louis Police Department.

New project in works for mall

BY MARY G. SEILEY

Plans for a major development at Highway 90 and Dunbar Avenue are in the making, although details are sketchy.

Chief Building Official William Carreege says he's met with the property's new owners from Baton Rouge to discuss the plans. However, Carreege told the Echo on Monday that he couldn't recall the developers' names. A leasing agent for the property said Tuesday there is a purchase agreement on the property, but no sale has occurred.

The commercial tract known as Bay St. Louis Mall has been on the market for months. It is the site of a bar and pawn shop, the Goodwill Store, 1st Choice Home Furnishings and a couple of vacant stores.

Classes will resume in B-W

BY GEOFF BELCHER

Despite the continuation of renovations that delayed the opening of the Bay St. Louis-Waveland School System, classes will still resume tomorrow in the district.

The system had originally been scheduled to resume classes on Aug. 6, but a revised construction schedule caused by a delay in renovations, including new roofing and wiring at North Bay Elementary, moved the start date back to Aug. 20.

"It's better than it was two weeks ago by several degrees of magnitude," school district board of trustees President Brion Griffith said Monday evening at a special meeting at North Bay Elementary. "We've done the full-court press--there's no question we did the right thing with the two-week delay. And there's no question we could not have opened two weeks earlier."

But Griffith conceded there are still problems.

Ballot is simpler for voters

BY ED LEPOMA

Hancock County voters will see a much simpler ballot proposal concerning a landfill in the Stennis Space Center buffer zone.

In an unexpected turn of events, the Hancock County Board of Supervisors on Monday agreed to a more simplified version than the one previously adopted.

The change was requested by Mary Sindors of Waveland, who heads Hancock Citizens for Responsible Dumping. Sindors waited more than three hours, allowing supervisors to handle other business, before approaching the Board.

Sindors told supervisors and County Attorney Gerald Gex that she showed the wording of the ballot to a few folks after the board and landfill opponents agreed to it early last July.

She said she and they felt the explanations attached to the ballot under each proposition explaining what a vote for or against each proposal would mean was "very confusing."

Deputies nab two in 'spree'

BY GEOFF BELCHER

A pair of Hancock County men were taken into custody late Tuesday evening after allegedly going on a Gulf Coast crime spree, stealing a truck and several thousand dollars' worth of other merchandise.

Deputies Brandon Ladner, Andre Fiser, Mike Delacruz and Corky Hoda, of Hancock County Sheriff Ronnie Peterson's office, arrested Daniel Chaves Talley, 20; and Anthony Hayes, 17, both of Standard, Chief Deputy Nathan Hoda said yesterday.

"We're charging them with possession of stolen property," Hoda said. "Harrison County has charges of grand larceny against them on the truck, and Long Beach has burglary charges on the other items."

911 plan shot down

BY MARY G. SEILEY

Plans to renumber the entire city of Bay St. Louis under a four-digit scheme were knocked down Tuesday after city council members were bombarded again with negative comments from the public.

Council members didn't vote on the matter, but sent a consultant back to the drawing boards to come up with a compromise recommendation more palatable to the public.

Tuesday's discussion of the matter had all the trappings of a full-blown public hearing, with numerous speakers from the packed meeting room. The audience challenged the need for a city-wide approach to renumbering.

Helping to fill the shelves

When Coast Electric employees learned that the Hancock County Food Pantry was in desperate need of canned goods and other food items, they decided to help the agency fill its shelves.

Throughout the month of June, employees sold raffle tickets for two Fourth of July Firecracker Gift Baskets. Tickets were sold to employees, their friends, relatives and to anyone interested in helping. The effort raised a total of $374 during the five-week fund-raising schedule.

Willie Thomas, committee chairman of Coast Electric's Employee Community Committee in Hancock County, recently presented Aileen Saucer, president of the Hancock County Food Pantry with the funds.

"We were pleased that we were able to raise as much as we did in such a short time," Thomas said.

According to Sauzer, during 1998, the Hancock County Food Pantry assisted 1,902 families representing 5,927 individuals, over eight percent more than were helped in 1997.

Thomas said, "Most people don't realize that a $6 contribution to the pantry provides groceries for one person for five days... quite a lot for such a small donation."

The Food Pantry is a United Way agency. It accepts donations and requests for assistance by contacting 228-467-2790.

Hancock School District construction update

The construction budget for the Hancock County School District's 1999-2000 school year is approximately $14 million or 35 percent of the district's $40 million budget.

Renovations at the four existing school campuses and construction of two new facilities are a direct result of the growing population on the Mississippi Gulf Coast and Hancock County in particular.

With the closing of the 1998-99 school year, construction was completed on a new media center/library at Charles B. Murphy Elementary in Pearlington.

Gulfview Elementary in Lakeshore welcomed a four-classroom addition, new cafeteria, and renovation of the old cafeteria to a fine arts building leaving only minor drainage work to be completed at the facility.

A wide variety of capital projects are scheduled for this school year at Hancock High School, the vocational Technical Center, and Hancock North Central Elementary. Hancock High School's first improvement will be new softball dugouts with lights to be completed by October 1999.

Also, students, faculty and visitors will enjoy additional sidewalks, canopy covers and campus lighting; updated restroom facilities, an expanded administration parking lot, and freshly paved student, teacher, commons, football and bus turnaround parking areas.

The Vo-tech Center, adjacent to the high school facility, will receive a face-lift with new building panels, a drop ceiling, fresh paint, new floor tile and parking/campus lighting.

Construction of a new eight-classroom addition will begin during the 1999-2000 school year at Hancock North Central Elementary and major renovations of the existing buildings are slated. Some of these include refurbishment of the gymnasium floor, a new office area, updated ceiling and floor tile, new air conditioning units, fresh paint, drainage improvements, a revised bus drop-off at the rear of the school, and parent pick-up and drop-off in the school's front.

Students, parents and district administration are anxiously awaiting completion of East Hancock Elementary and Hancock Middle School. The anticipated completion date for the new 67,000 square-foot elementary facility is September/October 1999.

Crews have completed the brickwork on the buildings, floor and ceiling tiles are being installed, and outside groundwork is under way.

Hancock Middle School, located adjacent to Hancock High School, is scheduled to open in January 2000 for students in grades six, seven and eight. Block work is complete on the buildings, roofing is nearly finished, and brickwork is expected to start by the end of the month.

Superintendent Terry Randolph notes, "As the 1999-2000 school year begins, the Hancock County School District is looking forward to the completion of East Hancock Elementary, continued progress on Hancock Middle School, and renovation of existing campuses to meet the needs of Hancock County's growing population."

Most importantly, these improvements are only one part of the district's effort to provide excellence in education for the 21st century. The overall mission is to ensure quality educational opportunities for all students of the district."

"CUEVAS' QUOTES"

By Ellis C. Cuevas

Last week Jane and I were able to sneak off for a visit to the Canadian Rockies for a vacation.

It had been almost a year since we were able to get away, and it was sure good to get away from the hot steamy temperatures.

Only thing, it was not that cold in the Rockies. I was able to wear a short-sleeved shirt all but one day, as temperatures were mostly in the high 60's and 70's.

We traveled with the Hancock Bank Classic Club coordinators Peggy Newman of Gulfport and Sue Moak of Baton Rouge.

Several others from the area with us included our longtime traveling friend Alice Masson of Waveland. Also on the journey were Mrs. Iva Mae McDonald, Mrs. Princess Fahey, the Harold Batalora's, John W. Booth, Cleo Watson and granddaughter Michelle Bocant, and the Bob Schutts.

As always, we had a great time and got to see some others whom we have traveled with on previous occasions.

This was the first time Jane and I vacationed in Canada, as we had only passed through Vancouver once before.

We traveled from Calgary to Vancouver spending only one night at any one hotel, except one we spent on a train.

Among the places we visited was Banff, Lake Louise, Jasper, Victoria and Vancouver.

Needless to say, it was a great trip, and we got to see some very beautiful country.

The world famous Butchart Gardens at Victoria were the most beautiful gardens I have ever visited. The trip there was worth the price of the vacation.

I have never seen so many flowers in such large numbers and varieties.

It was good to get away, but it is always good to be back home.

I received information on Tuesday morning that a candidate in the primary run-off has had some $700 worth of signs removed from the streets in Shoreline Park on Sunday and Monday nights.

Now, I realize that not everyone is for every candidate, but they have the right to post their signs if they follow the general requirements.

One must also remember that signs cannot vote, and the place to show support of or against a candidate is in the voting booth.

In traveling around I have also noticed several candidate signs of persons no longer in any races, and I feel they should be removed since their campaigns are over.

Many are gearing up for the big Tercentenary Park celebration set for Wednesday, August 25, in Bay St. Louis.

The dedication ceremony will begin at 10 a.m., 102 South Beach, Blvd. next to Hancock Bank.

This marks the date 300 years ago when French explorers, led by Jean Baptiste LeMoyne, Sieur de Bienville, entered and explored a "beautiful bay" that he named the Bay of Saint Louis.

Wednesday will mark the unveiling of a life-size statue Bienville.

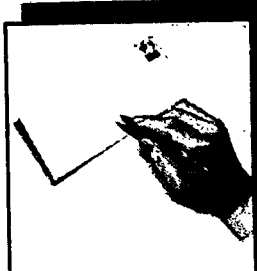

Over the past several months Hancock County Historical Society president Charles Gray, Hancock Bank, the City of Bay St. Louis and others have been very busy getting everything together for this big 300-year celebration for Bay St. Louis.

We are hoping there will be a large turnout for this special celebration.

Mother disappointed in HJH's girls fast pitch facilities

Dear Editor,

Last year my daughter moved from Hancock Elementary to Hancock Junior High. She left her community softball program excited about playing on our high school softball field with her team.

Little did we know we had much better facilities at Nease Community ballfield.

It is very sad that our Hancock High School softball team plays on our field without covered dugouts, and more importantly, without lights.

If last season would have been our girls' first season to play fast pitch on their field, I could understand, however, it was their third season playing under these same conditions.

I have witnessed new construction on both the baseball and football facilities. Come on! When will our girls, both varsity and junior varsity, be able to play entire games on our field before it gets dark? When can we be proud of our facilities when the guest teams come to play?

I have been told that the lights are now supposed to be up in the month of September.

Hopefully, for our girls' sake, it will be done. I think it's about time after three years of darkness. I would appreciate assistance in this matter.

Candidate cites several election day problems

Dear Editor:

In response to a comment in the Sunday, Aug. 8 edition of The Sea Coast Echo made by Mr. Ellis Cuevas, let me say that contrary to Mr. Cuevas' statement that problems were very minor with the primary elections held on Tuesday, Aug. 3, there were numerous irregularities at certain polling places around the county for instance.

A family member of one candidate was in the ballpit at one polling place.

In another instance black pool workers at Bay East were replaced by all white workers. This angered the voters, and rightfully so, as they had seen the same faces as pool workers at the polling places for over 20 years.

A rumor was circulated that one candidate had these workers removed. This was absolutely not true, but was a ploy to turn voters to another candidate.

In another discrepancy one candidate was allowed to run even though she wasn't qualified to do so. You have to reside in the county for two years before you run for those two offices.

But nothing was done about it. These and other irregularities should be looked into by the proper authorities.

Remember the old saying: don't believe everything you read, and before you put something in print, check your sources.

Don't believe everything you're told, especially if it's from the person running the primary or other election.

Will Hancock County ever have a truly honest election?

Good luck in the runoff.

Sincerely,
Thomas "Tom" Williams

Plans for animals need to be made for hurricanes

Dear Editor:

It's hurricane season and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) is asking people to please remember their four-legged friends.

During past natural disasters, PETA's emergency rescue team has witnessed sights ranging from a family who refused to evacuate if their animals were not allowed to come along, to a man who loaded his television set into the lifeboat while the dog looked on from his dog house.

Some farmers simply abandoned the pigs and other animals they raise for slaughter. Rabbits were left in hutches to crown. Our workers pulled cats out of trees where they had clung for days in violent thunderstorms.

One family left three dogs chained in their backyard. They were found drowned when the flood waters receded. Imagine the terror of swimming frantically at the end of a chain as the water rises higher and higher.

Please take a few minutes now to plan how to save your animals in the event of a flood or other natural disaster. Take them with you if at all possible. Otherwise, arrange to get them to a friend or relative who lives somewhere safe. Never, never leave an animal confined or tied. Learn which motels accept animals. (Almost all Motel Sixes do.)

Disasters hurt animals, too. Please lend them a helping hand.

Sincerely,
Carla Bennett
Senior Writer

EYES ON MISSISSIPPI

By Bill Minor

Why don't we have the 'open primary' system?

JACKSON—Every four years now when we hold statewide party primaries, exasperated voters want to know why they couldn't vote for their favorite candidates because they were on different party tickets.

Inevitably, the cry is heard: Why don't we have the "open primary" system like Louisiana so we can vote for any candidate in the primary we like, regardless of party?

You can do that in the November general election, however, unless the guy or gal you wanted to vote for in August has won his or her party nomination, they won't be on the ballot.

Frustration in primary elections has intensified the past 10 years or so since a number of long-time Democratic local officials—sheriffs, county supervisors, circuit clerks and such—have switched their party designation from Democrat to Republican.

Many voters find themselves with the dilemma, for instance, of wanting to vote for a sheriff they like, but can't because he's on the opposite party ticket from their favorite county supervisor.

In Harrison County, once a stronghold of the Democratic Party, the only candidates this time for sheriff (including the incumbent) were running as Republicans, while several incumbents in other county offices had remained Democrats.

Because they couldn't cross party lines in the county races, means, of course, voters also couldn't do it in the races for statewide office or the Legislature. Many believe that's why veteran Sen. Clyde Woodfield (D) Gulfport lost.

Perhaps it can be said that we are now the victims of our own success. We used to say Mississippi needed a two-party system, and now that we've got it, we find it has a down big side we didn't expect.

An open primary, rather than traditional party primaries, as far as I can determine, would now best suit most Mississippians.

To refresh your memory, in an open primary, all candidates, regardless of their party affiliation, would run in the same primary, and if no one received a majority, the two top vote-getters would face-off in the general election.

Why Mississippi doesn't have it, however, is a very long story, going all the way back to 1966 when the idea initially got serious legislative consideration here.

Three times since then, (1971, 1976 and 1979) the Legislature has passed legislation to install the open primary system, and sent it up for approval of the U.S. Justice Department under the 1965 Voting Rights Act, only to be rejected.

Significantly, both Democratic and Republican national administrations have turned Mississippi down on the open primary, each time for the same reason: Citing the state's long history of discrimination against blacks voting, Justice has seen it as a possible device to prevent black independent candidates getting on the ballot.

Ironically, while Mississippi has been unable to get the Justice Department to okay its open primary election system, neighboring Louisiana, which is also under the 1965 Voting Rights Act, was able—in 1974—to have the same system cleared by Justice.

Louisiana's even includes election of its Congressional officials, something Mississippi never tried to do.

Who is for, and who is against, an open primary in Mississippi has a rather checkered history. Originally, Gov. Paul B. Johnson, Jr. backed the idea after enduring "three primaries" as he called it in 1963—two Democratic and then the first strong GOP bid in the general election.

The state's Republicans back then were against the open primary idea, seeing it as a move to stymie their party's growth. In a few years, however, the Mississippi GOP, seeing the party success under it in Louisiana, were for it.

By this time, Democrats, especially blacks who had been elected in increasing numbers to the Legislature, turned against the idea. In the last 20 years, open primary proposals have made no headway in the Legislature. Some lawmakers believe there is such a huge buildup right now of support among Mississippi voters to install the open primary that it will force legislative action to enact a bill and once again try to get it cleared by Justice.

One strong convert to the open primary idea, Rep. Herb Frierson (D) Poplarville, said "the demand for it is spreading like wildfire down in this part of the state."

Already, this column has learned, six different House members have asked legislative draftsmen to prepare open primary measures for introduction in the 2000 session.

New hybrid rocket motor undergoes first long-duration test at Stennis

The first successful long-duration test of a new, 250,000-pound thrust hybrid rocket motor was conducted at NASA's Stennis Space Center Aug. 13.

The motor, which represents a new way of doing business for NASA, was designed and constructed by members of the Hybrid Propulsion Demonstration Program consortium.

Companies involved in the consortium are: Lockheed Martin Astronautics, Boeing Rocketdyne, Lockheed Martin Michoud Space Systems, Thiokol Corporation and United Technologies Chemical Systems Division.

The motor resembles the solid rocket boosters used on the Space Shuttle. This particular hybrid motor featured new technologies including a revolutionary new head-end combustion approach and ignition system designed by Lockheed Martin Michoud Space Systems in New Orleans. It is 70 inches in diameter, about 45 feet long and weighs 125,000 pounds.

The motor uses a solid fuel that is mixed and then poured into the casing of the motor and allowed to set and turn into a rubbery, semisolid form—similar to how gelatin is mixed, poured and allowed to set until it becomes almost solid.

To ignite the motor and continue the process of ignition during its flight, an oxidizer must be injected into the core of the motor. The oxidizer must continually be fed into the motor as long as the motor is required to function. When the flow of oxidizer stops, the motor shuts down.

The hybrid rocket motor being tested at Stennis is also environmentally safe. According to the NASA Environmental Office at Stennis, an environmental assessment was conducted that reviewed the possible impacts of testing the 250,000-pound thrust motor at Stennis Space Center.

"The environmental impacts identified in the environmental assessment are rocket motor combustion air emissions and short-term noise," said NASA's Jennette Gordon, an environmental specialist at Stennis.

"Short-term noise only impacts activities close to the test stand and, due to our buffer zone, does not impact local communities."

The test, which was conducted on the center's E-1 test facility, ran for 15 seconds. At this time, test data indicates that the motor performance was extremely stable throughout the test, and everything went according to plan.

"This long-duration test of the 250k hybrid rocket motor was an outstanding success," said NASA's Robert Bruce, project manager of the Hybrid Propulsion Demonstration Program at Stennis Space Center.

"We're very happy to see our customer (the consortium) experience such great success, since they've been working on this program for so many years. The Stennis test team did an outstanding job."

This was the second of several tests that will be performed on two separate Hybrid Propulsion Demonstration Program hybrid motors. The tests will demonstrate two different methods of ignition, as well as different methods of injecting the oxidizer.

Plan -- renumbering

Weeks ago, when council held its public hearing on the matter, nobody showed up.

But news that council had adopted an ordinance to implement the renumbering plan brought a significant delayed reaction, with citizens saying they were unaware until recently that the plan actually had been up for adoption.

Members of the countywide 911 Commission, including area police and fire department personnel, had engaged a consultant to look at Bay St. Louis' street names and numbers and come up with recommendations for eliminating confusion.

That study confirmed what area officials have noted for years: the city has many streets with out-of-sequence numbers that make it difficult in some cases to locate an address. Also, the city has some streets with duplicative names.

Consultant Ed Forest wanted to renumber the entire city, using a grid system connected to computer mapping. Each 50 feet of street frontage would receive a four-digit street number under Forest's original plan, allowing for the future addition of addresses as property is subdivided.

But with the first round of citizen complaints, Forest was asked to come up with an alternative less objectionable to downtown residents and merchants who balked at the four-digit idea.

Tuesday, Forest said the grid system would accommodate numbers starting at "zero" at the Bay Bridge, escalating by 10s as the system advanced westward. Under that plan, many addresses would remain less than four digits.

But there were objections to the new proposal Tuesday night. Some noted that Forest's plan would have properties just one block off North Beach Boulevard beginning in the 800s rather than the 100s, due to the alignment of the grid pattern.

Residents insisted that modern communications technology allows instant identification of a location, regardless of a street number. And council members questioned why the solution to the problems of some streets has to involve the entire city.

Forest did not back away from his statement that the citywide renumbering plan is the most efficient option available, from an emergency response standpoint.

If some streets' numbering schemes are left as-is, he said, the grid system's advantage is lost. Fewer residents will be upset by the renumbering, he added, but the efficiency of the system will be compromised.

Members of the audience agreed that there are problems that need to be remedied, but balked at the wholesale approach.

School

As of Monday evening, wiring under the school's canopies was still exposed and hanging loose, and a several feet-long hole had been dug in the middle of the school's main sidewalk.

However, architect Kevin Anderson and contractor Kim Schwegmann assured board members that several other renovations had been completed—including the installation of new windows in most of the classrooms—and the facility would be ready to receive students by tomorrow.

Other factors contributing to the two-week school delay have been corrected, Anderson said.

"I've been going over this every day, and there's only a few modest touch-up items remaining."

Schwegmann said North Bay's new roof will be ready for installation some time in mid-September, but board members have vowed the roof will not be installed while students are present.

President's Council on Year 2000 Conversion announces special resources

The President's Council on Year 2000 Conversion announced the creation of easy-to-use materials specifically designed to help teachers educate students on the Y2K computer problem through Newspaper in Education (NIE).

This initiative, known as the Y2K Youth Education Program, is a partnership between the President's Council, the Newspaper Association of America (NAA) and the National Newspaper Association (NNA), representing the nation's daily, weekly and community newspapers.

"In addition to getting information into the hands of teachers and our nation's young people, we hope students will share what they learn about the Y2K issue with their families," said Council Chair John A. Koskinen.

The joint undertaking will create and distribute education materials through NIE programs throughout the country. In mid-September, newspapers will receive a CD-ROM disk containing a Y2K teacher resource guide, student supplement and other Y2K resource materials.

Publishers across the nation will use the disk to easily reproduce the materials and distribute them with the newspaper to schools within their communities.

The newspaper supplement and teacher resource guide include feature articles, background information, useful Y2K preparedness checklists, resource information and interactive activities.

It also addresses myths and rumors and explains how to complexities of the Y2K challenge might affect local schools and communities.

"We are delighted that the joint efforts of the President's Council and Newspaper in Education programs will be helping educators, young people and their families learn how to be prepared for the century date change, and we strongly encourage newspapers to use these materials in their communities," said John F. Sturm, president and CEO of NAA, a nonprofit organization representing more than 2,000 newspapers in the United States and Canada.

"There is not much time remaining before the Year 2000 rollover so this is an ideal time for newspapers to participate in this program," said Lockwood Phillips, president of the NAA, which represents more than 4,000 community newspapers.

"With this program, we will provide papers with camera-ready feature articles, classroom materials, including a student supplement for all grade levels and an innovative guide for teachers."

"The model of providing materials to schools through newspapers allows teachers to incorporate news and current events into the learning process," added Koskinen. "The President's Council encourages businesses to support this important effort with sponsorship of the program through their local newspapers."

The instructional materials are being prepared by Use The News, under the management of its president, Dr. Betty L. Sullivan.

For information on how to participate in the program, call Dr. Sullivan at (415) 641-0611.

The President's Council on Year 2000 Conversion, established Feb. 4, 1998, by Executive Order 13073, is responsible for coordinating the Federal Government's efforts to address the Year 2000 problem.

Program designed to address shortage of nursing educators

As the "baby boomer" generation ages, the demand for nurses is expected to outstrip the supply by 2010, according to the American Association of Colleges of Nursing.

That means more nursing students must be taught the increasingly higher-level skills required to meet the healthcare needs of a nation. But as the average age of nursing professors continues to increase, the real question emerges — who will teach the next generation of nurses?

"As a nation, we must prepare more nurses for the teaching role if we are to graduate the number of qualified clinical nurses necessary to meet the needs of the future," said Dr. Rosemary Adams, dean of the School of Nursing at the University of Mobile.

In response to this need, the private university has added a new master's level program designed to prepare clinical nurses for teaching in a college setting.

The master of science in nursing program's new nursing education track includes courses on teaching methodology, curriculum development and evaluation of teaching effectiveness.

Graduates will be prepared to teach in a college setting, or to continue their education and pursue a doctoral degree in teaching and research.

Initial development of the program is being funded in part by a $25,000 grant from the Dr. Monte L. Moorer Foundation in Mobile.

Adams said the UM School of Nursing faculty is a prime example of a national trend toward an aging population of nursing educators, with more than half age 50 or older.

According to the American Association of Colleges of Nursing, the average age of associate professors in nursing nationwide was 52.1 years in 1997.

Additionally, about 75 percent of all nursing students nationally who entered master's degree programs in 1997 planned on careers as advanced practice nurses. Barely more than 4 percent were preparing for the educator role.

The result as the current group of nursing professors retires, there is a shortage of master's and doctoral level nursing educators prepared to take their place. If the shortage continues, the nation's colleges and universities won't have enough faculty to teach the number of nursing students needed to adequately staff the nation's hospitals and healthcare facilities.

Adams and UM nursing faculty will discuss the new program during a special information session Tuesday, Aug. 24. The meeting will begin at 6 p.m. at J. L. Bedsole Library on the UM campus, located just north of Mobile off I-65.

For information on the master of science in nursing education at the University of Mobile, call Dr. Adams at (334) 675-5990, ext. 227, toll free at (800) 946-7267 or email at dradams@aol.com.

Taylor announces grant for Bay-Waveland School District

U.S. Rep. Gene Taylor announced that the City of Bay St. Louis, in partnership with the Bay-Waveland School district, will receive a $17,500 grant.

Taylor said the grant will be used to fund innovative strategies to combat school crime and violence under the U.S. Justice Department's Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program.

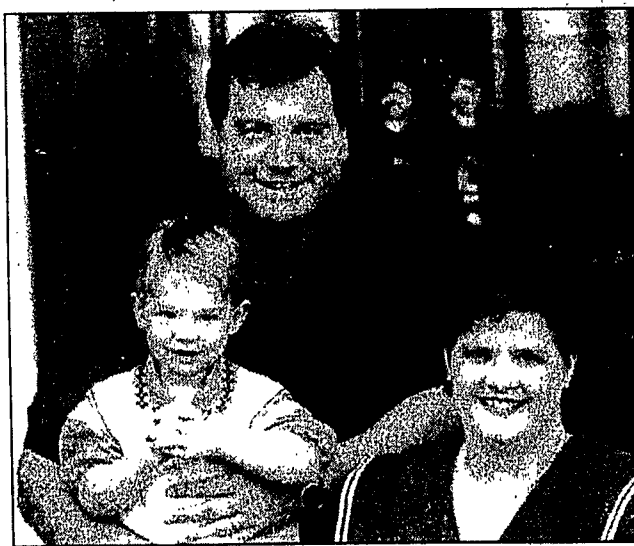

Taylor said, "Our schools must offer a safe learning atmosphere for both students and teachers. I commend Bay St. Louis and school officials for seeking this grant. It is important that we address any potential crime problems in our public schools before they occur."

The grant was awarded under the COPS Office's School

Based Partnerships program which funds partnerships between law enforcement agencies and schools or community organizations to target specific problems of school crime and violence.

According to the Justice Department, the grant money will be used by the school district to address any disputes between students and teachers which could pose a threat to student safety.

Many law enforcement officials have credited these types of grants with a reduction in school crime. To date, the COPS program has awarded grants to 11,300 law enforcement agencies to advance community policing and have funded the addition of more than 100,000 officers to the nation's streets.

"The work of gathering facts, historical data and photography to create this piece has been in process for approximately nine months. It has been like giving birth, and I can proudly say that the brochure has been delivered, and we are already showing this baby off," said Beth Carriere, the Tourism Bureau's executive director.

"Hancock County has wonderful tourism products to showcase, and we hope that this 12-page, full-color booklet/brochure will represent the county well.

The bureau will distribute the greater portion of the 55,000 copies to all who inquire about the county, primarily as a result of its advertising and marketing efforts. 12,000 copies will be mailed out to inquirers this week.

The brochure may soon be picked up at the Mississippi welcome centers of Hancock County, Jackson County, I-59 and Meridian and Pearl River centers, also at the Waveland and Bay St. Louis hospitality centers and the Bay St. Louis Bridge-Toll House.

Local and coastwide hotels, motels and inns, Gulfport Biloxi Regional Airport and various regional brochure racks will also provide an outlet for the booklet.

"This first one is great, however we are already planning for an updated printing," Carriere said.

Mississippi Casino Operators Assn. announces name change

The Mississippi Casino Operators Association (MCOA) announces that as of Sept. 1, the association will begin doing business as the Gulf Coast Gaming Association.

The reason for the change is to more accurately reflect the geographic location of the members and to avoid confusion with Mississippi's statewide gaming association.

The MCOA, d.b.a Gulf Coast Gaming Association, was chartered in 1993 and today represents all of the casinos located on the Mississippi Gulf Coast.

The organization represents the interests of the region's casino industry by promoting the common businesses and general welfare of the Coast's gaming industry, improving the industry's service to the public, cooperating with government officials in advancing the public interests and improving conditions throughout the industry.

The Gulf Coast Gaming Association is the producer of the largest and most prestigious gaming convention outside of Las Vegas . . . "the Southern Gaming Summit."

The group works in cooperation with the American Gaming Association in Washington, D.C., the Mississippi Gaming Association, headquartered in Jackson and other gaming associations throughout the United States.

Local designer wins three 'Fashion Oscars'

You may think the Gulf Coast isn't the place for high fashion. Try telling that to Tracy Stieffel.

Stieffel, of Bay St. Louis, last week brought home the gold, silver and bronze for her white, yellow, peach, blue and green clothing designs.

Stieffel won first place -- the Alpha Award -- in the Fashion Group Foundation of New Orleans' Alpha Awards for the Children's Collection of Ready to Wear Fashions.

The awards, according to the group's press release, "are designed to acknowledge and showcase the outstanding talent of the fashion industry in the ... region."

The Alpha region includes Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Florida's Panhandle and southern Alabama.

The Alpha Awards have been called the equivalent of the Academy Award for the fashion industry.

Stieffel's designs won first place for her Leisurewear collection; silver for her Country collection; and bronze for her Beach Babies collection.

In 1997, Stieffel won two Alpha Awards.

The clothing she has designed is available at The Kid Company in Bay St. Louis.

Nationally renowned writer Morris' corneas donated

Willie Morris was immortalized for his intellect, sweetness and generosity in eulogies and obituaries nationwide. Now, the posthumous donation of the writer's corneas has restored sight to two transplant recipients.

The transplants were performed by Dr. Connie S. McCaa at the University of Mississippi Medical Center in Jackson following Morris' Aug. 2 death.

"Willie Morris set an example for all of us in his life of sharing and giving to others. It seems only natural now that the donation of Willie's corneas should, by example, encourage people to donate their eyes and corneas so that others might see," said Mike Flynt, director of donor Services for Mississippi Lions Eye & Tissue Bank in Jackson, a member of the eye Bank Association of America.

"Dr. McCaa probably does more cornea transplants than all the other surgeons in Mississippi combined," Flynt said. Thirty-two other surgeons in the state perform such transplants. "The majority of cornea transplants also are performed at UMC," he added.

At the forefront of her field, McCaa is a UMC professor of ophthalmology and biochemistry and director of UMC's corneal and refractive surgery services.

Morris' family originally donated the Jackson writer's corneas anonymously. They now agree to release his identity as a donor to raise awareness of the dire, nationwide need for cornea and eye donations.

To aid the cause, Morris' two cornea recipients, John Epperson Sr. of Hazlehurst and Ozie Longino of Monticello, also agreed to make their transplants public.

"Both patients' transplants are looking fine," McCaa said. Both patients had been legally blind in their treated eye, with 20/400 vision or worse not correctable with eyeglasses.

"The cornea will clear up in about 24 hours," McCaa said at the close of Longino's Aug. 7 surgery on his left eye. "It will be up to three months before he'll see at the cornea's maximum. But it will be only about two to three weeks before he sees considerably better than he did."

Nobody could be happier than the transplant recipients about Morris' legacy of generosity.

Longino, 42, who is a forklift operator for Wal-Mart, recognized Morris' name. "Oh, yes, Thanks!" he said of receiving ing Morris' cornea. "I want to write that down, since I have a famous cornea. I'm going to take real good care of my eye for him." A few days after surgery, Longino said his vision is "improving constantly, a little every day ... and I'm reaping up on Willie Morris."

Morris is known for mentoring countless writers, both personally and as the youngest-ever editor-in-chief of Harper's magazine in New York in the 1960s. Epperson has been saying that he hopes his new tie to Morris inspires him to write a book. Hearing that, Longino said, "May be I'll write one, too."

Donated corneas may be transplanted into either eye; corneas have no left/right orientation, McCaa explained. The "window" of the eye, the cornea covers the front of the eye to transmit and focus light into the eye. "When the cornea is scarred or damaged, it can look to the patient just like a dirty windshield," she said.

She said Epperson's cornea problem was the most common cause for cornea transplants: an edema of the cornea (pseudophakic bullous keratopathy). Longino's vision was obscured by scarring from a severe Pseudomonas ulcer on his cornea, caused by an eye infection.

In addition to being a leading cornea transplant surgeon, McCaa was one of the first physicians in the nation to perform LASIK laser eye surgery. She is now in the first wave of physicians nationwide performing Intacs cornea ring implant surgery, which was a proved by the U.S. Food & Drug Administration in April.

A native of Lexington, McCaa is a UMC alum and joined the faculty in 1981. She is listed as one of the Best Doctors in America, which is a $2 million, two-year peer survey of practicing U.S. Physicians.

Flynt of the Eye Bank pointed out that even people with poor vision often have healthy corneas that may be donated.

Eyes and corneas are donated after death, and their removal doesn't affect the body's appearance for funerals -- which often is the concern of survivors, he said.

To donate your corneas or eyes, "the most important thing you can do is to tell your loved ones," he stressed.

Survivors must sign a donor release. For information, call the Mississippi Lions Eye & Tissue Bank at (601) 366-5362 or visit the Eye Bank Association of America's Web site at [www.restore sight.org](http://www.restore sight.org)

Public Service Commission serving as watch dog for Mississippi consumers

Public Service Commissioner George Byars announced this week that a total of 45 telecommunication companies have had their certificates cancelled in the last year due to failure to comply with the rules and regulations set forth by the Mississippi Public Service Commission (PSC).

"The commission some time ago set rules and regulations for companies. When these companies fail to follow the rules of the PSC we can force them out of business," said Byars.

He said that most complaints are "slamming" when a customer's long distance carrier is changed without the permission of the customer.

"I feel that looking at these numbers one can clearly see that we are hard at work to run these guys out who refuse to play by the rules. By no means have we taken care of all the companies who continually harass the people of our state, but we are steadily gaining on them," Byars said.

When a company fails to meet the requirements set forth by the Public Service Commission, the three commissioners can cancel the certificate which entitles them to offer their services inside the state of Mississippi. Please call Commissioner George Byars at 1-800-356-6429.

Guidelines for school lunch programs are announced

The State Department of Education announced the United States Department of Agriculture income guidelines for free and reduced price meals served under the School Lunch, School Breakfast, Food Distribution and Child and Adult Care Food Programs.

Families with children in any of these facilities who are unable to pay the full price of the meals are encouraged to apply for benefits.

Applications and instructions for applying for meal benefits will be sent home with each student during registration or on the first day of attendance. To apply for the meal benefits, each household should fill out the application and return it to the school or center. Additional copies of the application are available at the administrative office of each facility.

For the school/center officials to determine eligibility, the household must report income information or provide a food stamp or TANF or FDIPIR (Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations) case number.

If the child received TANF payments or is a member of a food stamp household, or a member of a FDIPIR household, the parent or guardian has to provide only the name of the child, food stamp or TANF or FDIPIR case number, and sign the application.

Adults in adult care centers who are members of food stamp households or who are SSI or Medicaid participants are automatically eligible to receive free meals benefits after a completed application has been approved.

Other applicants must report household income identified by source, such as earnings, welfare and alimony received by each household member. In order for income applicants to be approved, the household must provide the following on the application:

The names of all household members; each household member's monthly income identified by source; the signature of an adult household member certifying that the information provided is correct; and the social security number of the adult who signs the application or an indication that this adult household member does not have a social security number.

The information provided by the household is confidential and will be used only for purposes of determining eligibility and verifying data. The information provided may be verified at any time during the year by school/center or program officials.

Households are required to report increased in household income of over $50 per month or $600 per year and decreases in household size. Also, if a household member becomes unemployed or if the household size increases, the household should contact the school/center.

Such changes may make the children of the household eligible for reduced price or free meals if the household's income falls at or below the levels shown in the income scales. Households may apply for benefits at any time during the year as circumstances change.

In certain cases, foster children are also eligible for meal benefits. If a household has foster children living with them and wishes to apply for meal

Each school/center has a copy of the approved free and reduced meal policy. The policy indicates who is responsible for determining eligibility. The determining official is, in most instances, the principal, the food service administrator or the center director.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT!

Packing It Safe

Tired of the same old school lunch? Packing your lunch can add variety, but take care. Bacteria grow and multiply rapidly in the danger zone between 40°F and 140°F (out of the refrigerator or before food begins to cook). So, food transported without an ice source or left out in the sun at a picnic won't stay safe long. Keeping your school lunch safe begins at home:

- Use clean plates and tools when you prepare food.
- Wrap sandwiches tightly and put in a sealed bag or container.
- Wash fresh fruits and vegetables before you eat them.
- Pack lunches in an insulated bag or lunch box.
- For hot foods, such as chili or soup, rinse insulated containers with boiling water before adding the hot food.
- Wash lunch boxes and insulated containers after every use.
- Store lunches in a cool place out of direct sunlight.
- Always wash hands before eating.

Freeze water bottles, fruit juice boxes or gel packs so that they'll be cold and keep the food cold. Place these items in the lunch box just before leaving the house. Plus, the water and juice double as cold beverages.

Of course, if there's a refrigerator at work or school, store perishable items there upon arrival. Once gel packs and other cold sources thaw, perishables are not safe — discard them.

For more food safety tips, contact the Mississippi Beef Council at 601/354-8951 or 680 Monroe St., Ste. A, Jackson, MS 39202.

Brought to you by Mississippi beef producers through the $1-per-head beef checkoff.

Information gathered from contact with parents and other agencies will be used to help determine present and future program needs to aid in the progress toward a goal of providing a free and appropriate public education to all disabled children in Hancock County School District.

Persons with disabled children who are 21 years old or younger are encouraged to contact Federal Program Director Barbara Franklin at 255-6626.

Feud -- supervisors

He said there are a lot of elderly, and poor living in the area, and they can't afford the extra expense should their wells go dry.

He had samples of water taken at various intervals and said people are afraid to drink it and are buying water, and some can't wash their clothes because of the brown-tainted water.

DeSalvo said Boudin has dug a pit 36 feet wide and seven feet deep in order to excavate the dirt he sells, and believes an artesian well in the center of the pit is pouring millions of gallons of water into nearby ditches, causing the water table to fall.

To compound matters, DeSalvo said county road crews dug out the ditches deeper so the water could flow quicker.

"I am 99.9 percent sure this problem came when the pit was dug," said DeSalvo.

He said he notified the state Department of Environmental Quality and Hancock County's Water and Sewer District about the problem.

The Board's records show that on July 16, county supervisors passed a resolution drafted by county attorney Gerald Gex, and in a subsequent letter, Boudin was requested that Boudin "cease and desist from removing dirt from your property...until you furnish the county with a copy of your permit from the Department of Environmental Quality."

The resolution also asks Boudin to cease operations at the pit "because you are pumping water from your pit into the public ditches and are causing damage to the road."

Boudin was at the meeting, and mentioned that it was not the first time he had locked horns with DeSalvo and surrounding neighbors.

Some years ago, when Boudin had the county's garbage hauling contract, he bought 10 acres on Harbor Drive to store and maintain his fleet of trucks, and residents turned out in picket lines to protest his plans, to no avail.

Boudin said, "It's more of a personal deal." He told supervisors anyone was welcome to look over his operations. He said there were three wells in the area next to his business, and no one said they were having water problems.

District 4 Supervisor Steve Seymour said he took county engineer Larry Seal to look over the situation last week.

Seal suggested the Board hire Thad Shows from Columbia, a water well expert, "at a rate of $70 an hour, not to exceed $2,000" to investigate the problem and make a report to the Board.

Steve Barrau, of 15132 Chickasaw Steet in Jourdan River Shores, told supervisors he was on the board of directors and represented the Property Owners Association.

He said neighbors on Chickasaw Street and those immediately adjacent to a vacant lot have tried to no avail to get Tom Runnels to clean up debris from his lot.

Another Chickasaw Street resident in the audience complained that the area was in the midst of hurricane season, and she was concerned about all the debris floating down the dead-end street should the tides rise. "And, that's our only way in and out," she said.

Barrau said residents grew more concerned when they learned that Runnels planned to try and obtain permission from the county Planning Commission to build a boathouse and storage shed on the property.

Barrau said the subdivision is governed by strict covenants, which supercede county zoning laws, but Runnels never came to the POA with plans to build anything.

Instead, Runnels said he went to the Planning Commission to get a permit so he could get electricity hooked up to the lot, and he was refused.

Willie Gavney, the county's chief building official and zoning enforcement officer, pointed out that the lot is in the floodplain, and "no accessory structures are allowed unless there was already a house on the lot."

"I will not and cannot give him a permit," said Gavney.

Runnels told supervisors he owned a business (the Boiling Dock) that faces Chickasaw Street as it fronts Hwy. 603, and he has paid taxes and water bills on both his properties since 1991.

He said he has a boat repair business, but has been unable to devote full-time to it because he spends a lot of time in Houma due to an illness in the family.

He claimed he has tried to clean up the debris, but had planned to put most of it in the storage shed he hoped to build.

The Echo visited the site Tuesday and was accompanied by Barrau. The Boiling Dock is now closed, but Barrau said it is tied up in part of a lease agreement with the operators of the nearby operators of Willie's River Dock restaurant.

Chickasaw Street curves, then dead-ends, and Runnels lot was just past the curve in the road. The site was strewn with old bar stools, sheet metal, drift wood and other debris.

Barrau pointed out that it was almost directly across the street from a raised house that is on the market "for $300,000".

Supervisors accepted a petition signed by residents of Jourdan River Shores to declare the lot a public menace and a threat to the safety and health of the community.

They will hold a hearing on the petition on Sept. 13, and asked Runnels, in the meantime, to show good faith and clean up the area.

Under current law, if the property is determined to be a public menace, the county can hire someone to clean it up and put a lien on the property in order to recover the expenses.

Ballot -- simpler

Gex, assisted by Waveland attorney Ronnie Artigues and with Sinderson's input, had worked out the explanations prior to gaining supervisors' approval, and he seemed surprised by the request.

"We met on two or three occasions, and the Board asked for explanations," said Gex. "This is what everybody agreed to back in July."

Gex said, "I really don't care one way or the other. It's up to the Board."

Gex said he had already submitted the wording of the ballot to U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno and to the state Election Commission, and the simplified wording would now have to be submitted.

He said the simplified ballot would also have to be made part of the record to a Bill of Exception filed in Chancery Court by Mississippi Waste of Hancock County, proposed developers of the landfill.

Sinderson said, she felt, "If the ballot was simplified, we will get better results," said Sinderson.

District 4 Supervisor Steve Seymour asked if there was time enough to change the wording and get everyone's approval before the Nov. 3 general election and was assured there was.

Supervisors had to rescind to previous motions, then unanimously adopted the new wording.

After the vote, District 2 Supervisor Rocky Pullman of Pearlinton told Sinderson, "This is it for me. I'm not changing it again."

As modified, there would be two propositions put before voters on Nov. 3.

Proposition #1 would read: Are you for or against the establishment of a privately owned landfill in the buffer zone surrounding Stennis Space Center or elsewhere in Hancock County?

Proposition #2 would read: If you oppose a privately owned landfill in Hancock County, are you for or against the proposition that any sanitary landfill located in Hancock County must be owned, maintained, and operated under the jurisdiction of the Hancock County Board of Supervisors with refuse accepted only from within Hancock County and neighboring counties in Mississippi?

Before the discussion was ended, supervisors also gave Gex permission to approach local attorney Michael Haas Jr. to see what he might charge to represent the county when the Chancery Court takes up the Bill of Exception.

Arrests -- spree

Among the items the two men allegedly stole, Hoda said: A Ford F-150 pick-up truck owned by Greg Ladner of Long Beach; a generator; a compressor; several weed eaters; and 11 go-carts.

The truck had been reported stolen in Harrison County,

Hoda said, and "the tags had been switched, but we had received word that the truck had been spotted several times in (Hancock County).

Although Hayes is only 17 years old, Hoda said, he is being charged as an adult.

The incident is still under investigation by Hancock County investigators Phillip Pavolini, George Burleson, Matt Karl and Anthony Calvanese; and Long Beach Police Department detectives Roland Flowers and Susan Taylor.

Talley and Hayes are lodged in the Hancock County Justice Facility.

Project -- mall

Carrigee said plans for the property include demolition of the mall's building that parallels Highway 90. A new building, twice the size of the old one, will be put in its place and occupied by a single tenant, Carrigee said. The facade of the other building on the property will be refurbished to make it blend in with the new building, Carrigee also said.

Carrigee said the new owners are anxious to get the project underway as soon as possible, and will be submitting site plans for the city's review.

There are unconfirmed reports that the new building will be constructed to accommodate a national chain drug store.

Members of City Council discussed the development briefly Monday night, in the context of a request from 1st Choice to leave its non-conforming sign in place a while longer. Carrigee had cited the furniture store several months ago for erecting a sign much larger than the city code allows. City Council had given 1st Choice a grace period before requiring removal of the sign.

With the property's redevelopment at hand, Carrigee said 1st Choice owners would have to conform to the new mall's signage format.

But council members said Monday that despite the prospect of a property redevelopment, they were not inclined to allow any further waiver for 1st Choice from the city's sign ordinance.

An employee at the furniture store said Tuesday that 1st Choice is opening a new store in Gulfport and plans to relocate the sign to that facility. Regulations in Gulfport will accommodate the sign that's been in dispute under Bay St. Louis' ordinance, he said.

Knost Regatta is August 21 and 22

The organizing authority of this regatta is the Pass Christian Yacht Club.

The regatta will be governed by The Racing Rules of Sailing, the prescriptions of the US Sailing Association, the Gulf Yachting Association "Regulations for Sanctioned Events" and the respective class rules, except as any of these are altered by the sailing instructions.

In the event of any conflict, GYA regulations shall govern. Flying Scot competition will be a USSA Level 3 event.

The regatta is classified as a Category A event in accordance with Rule 74 and Appendix G.

1. Competition for the Commodore Bernard L. Knost Trophy:

Participants, including crew, shall be limited to members of the feminine sex and shall have attained an age of 12 prior to Jan. 1, 1998.

A participant may skipper in only one race, and no participant may sail in more than two races. All other requirements are outlined in the GYA "Regulations for Sanctioned Events."

2. Competition for the Coco Seemann Cup:

Skippers and crew are limited to members of the feminine sex. Races are to be sailed in Luders L-16 Class yachts.

3. Handicap and cruising classes:

Entries are limited to seaworthy boats not less than 20' LOA with a draft not less than 22" and with a minimum freeboard of 10". All boats must have a permanent cabin.

Every headsail flown by Cruising Class boat must be hanked to a permanent stay on the vessel's centerline, and no more than one headsail shall be supported by any stay. All handicap and cruising class boats must be equipped with a marine VHF transceiver.

At least one-half of the crew, including skipper, of Handicap and Cruising Class boats must be members of the Feminine sex.

In 1936 and 1937 when sailing enthusiast Bernard Knost was Commodore of the Pass Christian Yacht Club, he created what some say may have been America's first all-female sailboat regatta. Its purpose was to encourage women to sail the ocean fearlessly.

The first Knost Regatta took place in 1938. Sixty-two years later, it is one of the premier annual events on the Gulf of Mexico and draws female sailors who are indeed fearless, talented competitors.

This year Evelyn Gregory, regatta chairlady, will be assisted by Knost family member Jean Bittenbender to welcome everyone to the Pass Christian Yacht Club for a weekend of sailing sportsmanship.

Officers will check for hunter safety cards

During the upcoming hunting season, state wildlife conservation officers will be checking the hunting licenses of young hunters to make sure they have passed a hunter education course, according to the Department of Wildlife, Fisheries and Parks.

State law requires anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1972 to satisfactorily pass a hunter education course before purchasing a hunting license. Each student who passes is issued a hunter safety card bearing their certification number.

"It is the responsibility of license agents across the state to physically check and make sure anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1972 has a hunter education card before they are issued a valid hunting license," Hunter Education Coordinator Steve Adcock said.

During the normal course of checking licenses in the field, our officers have uncovered situations where young people were issued licenses without either having a hunter safety number, or the number had been falsified."

Adcock said both the license agent and person buying the hunting license have a responsibility to make sure the hunter has a valid hunter education number and that it is checked before a license is issued.

Several weeks ago, a letter and a sign to be posted by the license agent were sent out to license agents across the state,

Adcock said, explaining the law requiring them to check the hunter education card of those born on or after Jan. 1, 1972 before issuing a hunting license.

"For the upcoming hunting season, we have a computer system in place that will make it possible for an officer checking a license in the field to call in a verify that the hunter safety certification number on the license is valid," Adcock said.

"Citations will be issued for any falsified hunter safety card numbers, and we will also then check the license agent for possible law violations."

Adcock said hunter safety education has contributed greatly over the years to making hunting a safer sports, and we want to continue this trend.

Friday Night Fight in the Bay

Casino Magic Bay St. Louis, in conjunction with Fight Coordinator Les Bonano, present an evening of boxing Friday, Aug. 27 in the Casino Magic Entertainment Complex.

Doors open at 6:30 p.m. with the first bout scheduled to start at 7 p.m.

Casino Magic Bay St. Louis is home to boxing champions such as Larry Holmes, Roy Jones, Jr., Hector "Macho" Camacho, Oscar De La Hoya, Eric "Butterbean" Esch and Roberto Duran.

Featured will be a 10-round Super Middleweight war between Will "The Irish Flame" McIntyre (21-1, 9 KO's), from Covington vs. Tony "T-Bone" Adams (14-6-2, 7 KO's), who hails from Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Winner of this action-packed match-up will be declared the Southern Super Middleweight Champion.

McIntyre last fought at the Magic June 11. He systematically punished Stacy Goodson for four grueling rounds before blasting him with three combinations to the face, causing the bout to be halted at 2:22 of round four.

McIntyre has been training under the watchful eye of 30-year veteran trainer Vince Arnona, who came out of retirement with the hope of leading McIntyre to a World Title.

The co-feature will pit two heavyweight KO artists against each other in what promises to be a real slugfest. Richie Melito (20-1, 19 KO's) of Queens, N.Y., will be looking for his 20th KO vs. tough Dan Conway (9-1, 6 KO's) from Boston, Mass.

Also appearing on the card will be female junior lightweight sensation Deborah Nichols (8-0, 3 KO's) of Dalton, Ga. vs. a yet to be announced opponent.

In the Junior Lightweight Division, Brenda Vickers (1 W, 1 L) of Tampa, Fla., will battle

Pam Opdyke of New Orleans (1 W 1 L).

Appearing on this six-bout card will be the return of Slidell's Jeanne "Boom-Boom" Martinez (8-2-1, 2 KO's) to Casino Magic vs. an as yet to be named opponent.

Martinez captured her IBA Lightweight Championship belt by scoring an impressive 10-round unanimous decision over Snowdene Blakney on June 11 at Casino Magic Bay St. Louis.

"Geriatric" Joey Ancona (5-0, 4 KO's) a martial arts specialist who returned to the ring after a 10-year layoff last month, will be seeking his sixth victory on the card.

A late addition to the card is Metairie's Dominick Carter, whose opponent is yet to be named.

For tickets, call the Casino Magic Box Office at 1-800-5-MAGIC-5 or any Ticketmaster outlet.

Mississippi men nabbed for illegal fishing

Three Rankin County men were arrested Sunday afternoon on Ross Barnett Reservoir for illegal fishing, according to the Department of Wildlife, Fisheries and Parks.

Travis Evans, 44, and Jerry Evans, 42, both of Morton, and Jessie Evans, 18, of Pulaski, were arrested around 5 p.m. on the reservoir north of Hwy. 43 in the Pearl River by Sgt. Randy Newell, Sgt. Greg Walter and Pvt. Johnny McKinion with the Department of Wildlife, Fisheries and Parks.

All were arrested for illegal fishing with an electronic device. In addition, boat operator Jerry Evans was cited for having only one wearable life jacket in the boat.

They were taken to the Rankin County Jail where Judge Ken Warren set bond at $4,000 for each of the three.

A court hearing has been set for Aug. 31 in Rankin County Justice Court. If found guilty, each could face a maximum fine of $5,000.

Officers confiscated a 14-foot johnboat, a 9.9 hp Johnson motor and a boat trailer.

Northwestern State standout to join Eagles

University of Southern Mississippi baseball coach Corky Palmer announced that Josh Hoffpaur, a three-year starter of Northwestern State in Natchitoches, La., is transferring to Southern Miss for the 2000 season.

A native of Vidalia, La., Hoffpaur (5-9, 180) was named Southland Conference Newcomer of the Year following his freshman season in 1997. He hit .318 with a team high six triples while earning second team All-Southland Conference honors.

During his sophomore season in 1998, Hoffpaur moved from third base to second base and set a single-season school record with 244 at bats while starting all 60 games for the Demons. He hit .311 for the season and had a 14-game hitting streak.

Hoffpaur saw his numbers drop off during the 1999 season, batting just .268 in 47 games for the Demons. He will enter his final season of collegiate baseball with a .303 career batting average.

Emergency farm assistance package is needed approach

The leader of Mississippi's Farm Bureau organization has commended House members for their introduction of a bill addressing the current economic crisis threatening farmers.

"Farmers and ranchers across the country are under siege from historically low prices that are impacting nearly every sector of American agriculture," said Farm Bureau President David Waide.

"Unless Congress and the administration move forward with a comprehensive assistance package, many producers will be faced with a tough decision of hanging on and watching their farms wither away or cashing in and getting out. Either way, the prospects for American agriculture as we know it are bleak."

Waide said the bill introduced (Farm and Ranch Emergency Assistance Act/HR 2743) by Rep. Jo Ann Emerson (R-Mo.) and sponsored by 16 other House members is headed in the right direction and would provide meaningful and timely assistance to producers.

Key provisions of the bill which sponsors estimate would cost just under $8 billion, include:

- Provide market loss payments equal to 100 percent of annual market transition payments;
- Provide market loss payments for soybean and oilseed producers;
- Prohibit existing and future unilateral agriculture trade sanctions;
- Suspend loan deficiency and marketing loan payment limits for two years;
- Fully fund the cotton step two program;

- Provide market loss payments to livestock and dairy producers;
- Expand emergency concessional food sales and food donation programs;
- Expand the conservation Reserve Program to the full 36.4 million-acre capacity;
- Provide early access to market transition payments, and
- Continue to crop insurance premium discount for crop year 2000.

Waide stressed that this bill only addresses the current price and cash flow crisis and does not take into account the drought across many sections of the nation, a problem that must be faced this fall.

Edith de Vries: 'Dirty, bruised and bloody,' but alive

(This is the sixth in a series of eight stories tracing the death and destruction caused by Hurricane Camille on the Mississippi Gulf Coast in 1969.)

The stories are based on interviews conducted with survivors a decade after the storm by the University of Southern Mississippi Oral History Program, currently directed by Dr. Charles Bolton. The interviewer was R. Wayne Pyle of USM.)

By Phil Hearn

PASS CHRISTIAN — Edith Byrd de Vries was 73 years old and confined to a wheelchair when she was blown from her Mississippi Gulf Coast home into the gloomy, surging waters of Hurricane Camille three decades ago.

She was found a couple of days later — "dirty, bruised and bloody," but alive.

Mrs. de Vries was quite a lady. She was a fighter, a survivor. Camille was no lady. She was a killer.

A lumberman's daughter, born near Van Cleave, Miss., in 1896, Mrs. de Vries remembered sitting on the knee of her aging grandfather when she was 3 years old.

"I remember he had a long white beard, and I used to go get on his knee in the afternoon and tell the biggest lies — and he'd say, 'Yeah, uh huh,'" she said with a laugh during a 1979 interview with the University of Southern Mississippi Oral History Program.

While still a child, her mother died suddenly of a heart attack. "She put me to bed and then called my youngest sister to put her to bed — and she dropped over dead," Mrs. de Vries recalled.

Married right after high school, she taught school for several years in Louisiana, had a daughter by her first husband, lived in Houston, Texas, for a year and then took her daughter to New York City to accept a job with a hotel chain. She arrived in the Big Apple on Sept. 23, 1928, the night Gene Tunney dethroned Jack Dempsey for the heavyweight boxing title.

Mrs. de Vries lived in New York for the next 18 years — managing apartment hotels, raising her daughter, and spending much of her spare time riding a bicycle and playing tennis.

"I looked in the mirror and I said, 'Well, are you just going to get old, or are you going to fight it?' and I said, 'I'm going to fight it.' And I went out and bought a bicycle."

After marrying furniture designer Herman de Vries in 1944 — he was 59 and she was 47 — and spending the next 11 years living in Connecticut, she persuaded her husband to move to Pass Christian. They settled into a spacious west beach home along U.S. 90, just 800 feet north of the Gulf.

By Aug. 17, 1969, as Hurricane Camille bore down on the Mississippi Gulf Coast with winds of more than 200 miles an hour and tides of up to 30 feet, Mrs. de Vries was 73 and confined to a wheelchair with a broken hip. Herman was housed at a Gulfport nursing home. He would die in 1970.

With her the night Camille hit shore were her divorced daughter, Earle, and four members of the Lafollette family, who occupied a rental apartment to the rear of the main household.

Mrs. de Vries told a horrifying story of their struggle for survival:

"When we heard the glass windows on the front porch crash (about 10 p.m.) . . . we left the living room and went to the bedroom — for by that time, the water was coming under the front doors opening onto the front porch.

"In no time, the front doors were broken in, and the porch furniture began to float into the bedroom. There was iron furniture, chairs, posts from the piers in the Gulf, floating right through the bedroom.

"The water rose higher and higher. I had gotten out of the wheelchair and was standing inside a closet holding onto a walker. The walls cracked, the mirror and pictures fell, and the furniture floated up with the water.

"When we were nearing the ceiling, which was breaking up, the two men (of the Lafollette family) pushed a hole through the roof of the bathroom to pull us through to the roof."

Her daughter was blown into the water, clinging to debris until she was rescued at dawn the next day. The four Lafollettes floated to safety on a piece of bathroom roof and survived. Mrs. de Vries was blown off the roof and into the water, for what she described as "the wildest ride of my life."

Latching on to "several boards fastened together," she was carried northwest for about three-quarters of a mile and over the railroad tracks that ran through Pass Christian.

"The boards I was carried on were jammed up against something white, which I discovered was a part of the side of our house. So I climbed on it to get out of the water, thinking of snakes. I lay there until the next morning, the rain beating down and the wind almost blowing me off my flat. It was very cold and I was chilled to the bone."

Unable to walk, much less wade through the waist-deep water, she remained on the debris all of the following day, crying for help and fruitlessly attempting to attract the attention of airplanes circling above. Finally, bruised and battered, she was rescued by Navy Seabees on Aug. 19 and hospitalized.

When she returned to the scene of the calamity six days later, "the front steps were all that was left of our home.

Hurricane Camille's 30th birthday brings weather service reminder

August marks the 30th anniversary of Hurricane Camille, the second strongest hurricane to strike the United States this century, and the National Weather Service reminds not only coastal residents, but also those living hundreds of miles inland, that rain from tropical storms can cause widespread flooding capable of extensive damage.

Camille was born west of Grand Cayman Island on Aug. 15, 1969 and strengthened as it moved into the Gulf of Mexico. Two days later, the hurricane hit the Mississippi coast, just east of Bay St. Louis, with 190 mile-per-hour winds and 30-foot tides, killing 143 people along the seaboard from Alabama to Louisiana.

Camille was only the second Category 5 storm ever to hit the mainland U.S., after a 1935 Labor Day storm struck the Florida Keys.

In the hardest hit areas along the lower Louisiana peninsula and Mississippi, more than 5,000 homes were totally destroyed with 40,000 damaged. Storm tides surged 20 and 30 feet.

"After landfall, Camille weakened steadily as it moved on a curving path through Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia," recounted William Proenza, director of the NWS Southern Region.

"The heavy rains normally accompanying a dying hurricane diminished from nearly eight inches in southern Mississippi to one to two inches in eastern Kentucky as the tropical depression passed through," he said.

The minimal rainfall was expected to continue on Aug. 20 as the storm proceeded on a course through West Virginia and into central Virginia.

"In the dark hours of the night, a dramatic change occurred over the rural mountains of Virginia, said John Forsing, director of the NWS Eastern Region, who served during Camille as an Air Force weather officer at Eglin Air Force Base in the Florida Panhandle.

"Camille's remnants intensified rapidly as it turned to the east. The gentle rains that had fallen in Kentucky without causing much flooding became, in the space of a few hours and tens of miles, a torrent of precipitation," said Forsing.

In eight hours, 28 inches of rain deluged Nelson County, Va., an amount that more than tripled the state's 24-hour record — set by a 1942 hurricane — and has not been broken since. In other parts of the state, 12-14 inches came down during the night.

Al Kachie, an NWS hydrologist who served on a special survey team studying the disaster, remembered measuring rainfall in a barrel used to burn garbage.

"A man had just emptied the barrel before the rain began and about a week later, the survey team came across it. It measured 27-and-a-half inches of rain in that barrel, and we also found other receptacles which had a similar amount of rainwater."

Katchie also told of the anger raised by a local police officer who had ordered the evacuation of about 20 homes near a small creek in the middle of the night.

"The people were quite mad and threatened to report him to his superiors," Kachie said. "Afterward, they were thanking him for their lives. Camille's floods left nothing of the houses."

Record flooding occurred in the streams all along Camille's path through Virginia. Flash floods and numerous landslides devastated the countryside as Camille's remnants moved rapidly across the state before exiting into the Atlantic Ocean.

Flash flooding along headwater streams and tributaries of the James River was followed by record flooding along the main stream of the river all the way to Richmond where the tidal estuary begins, Kachie noted.

The State of Virginia counted 113 dead with 39 missing with total damages amounting to over $116 million ($534 million in 1997 dollars). The floods, rain-induced landslides, and property damage indicated that this event was the worst natural disaster ever to strike the state. Camille's total damage was estimated at $1.4 billion at the time ($6.45 billion in 1998 dollars).

"Camille caused emergency managers to rethink ways to reduce storm fatalities," said Jerry Jarrell, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami. "Today, coastal evacuation is mandatory in many locales, making the strategy so successful that now, virtually no casualties are caused by storm surge flooding."

The Hurricane Center's recent research shows more people lose their lives to freshwater floods developing after hurricanes make landfall than from accompanying wind, waves, and storm surge. "In fact, nearly half of the 256 fatalities caused by Camille were the result of freshwater flooding," Jarrell said.

Another area of huge potential loss, in addition to inland floods and mudslides, is traffic jams during mass evacuations. For example, Jarrell noted that a highway construction project snarled traffic and left 10,000 people on roadways near Pensacola, Fla., when Hurricane Opal caused $3 billion worth of damage in 1995.

"If the storm had not taken a turn away from the traffic jam, thousands of people could have been killed," Jarrell said.

The bottom line, the hurricane expert said, "If you are told to evacuate, do so immediately. If your area is not evacuated, stay of the roads and stay put."

Jarrell added: "As we start the new millennium, devastating storms such as Camille will be tracked by an array of modern technology and an infrastructure designed to forecast, observe, warn, and respond. Our forecasters have powerful tools to assist them in tracking hurricanes and estimating their precipitation."

Jarrell points to today's modernized weather service technology including Doppler radar, which can track and measure precipitation and winds in a storm; weather satellites; and automated river and rain gauges to measure rainfall and river levels that give forecasters the upper hand.

The weather service's Advanced Weather Interactive Processing System (AWIPS) and powerful weather forecast models allow for rapid creation and dissemination of forecasts, watches, and warnings to the public, news media, and the emergency management infrastructure.

"Once our warnings and forecasts are disseminated, state, county and local emergency management personnel implement their plans and programs to save lives and property," Jarrell said.

"Hurricanes, tropical storms, and tropical depressions can have life-threatening impacts hundreds of miles inland," Forsing concluded. "We encourage the public to be alert to — and prepared for — any hurricane's heavy rain, lightning, tornadoes, floods and flash floods."

On average, the Atlantic hurricane season produces about nine tropical storms and six hurricanes, with two being intense hurricanes.

Everything we had was gone."

Mrs. de Vries later sold some of her property, rebuilt on a smaller portion of the lot, nursed her husband until his death and was still active at the time of the 1979 interview — playing golf, mowing her lawn and tending a flower garden.

"I've gone through quite a lot," she told the interviewer.

"I've had a lot of fun, I've had a lot of trouble. But all in all, I'm to the good."

American pie on the menu at Casino Magic Bay St. Louis

Casino Magic Bay St. Louis will present Don McLean today at 8 p.m. for $10, $15 and $20. McLean, a big 70's and 80's singer-songwriter, put out "American Pie" in 1971. The song is about three legends of rock, Buddy Holly, Richie Valens and the Big Bopper, who all died in a plane crash in 1959. This day was one of the most remembered days in the life of young, impressionable teens. McLean, himself was a teen then and must have been touched deeply.

He followed "American Pie" with "Vincent," which was also a smash. He enjoyed a renaissance of sorts with the 1980's Chain Lightning, his first Top 30 LP in close to a decade.

It spawned a Top-10 smash with its cover of Roy Orbison's classic "Crying," and his originals "Castles in the Air" and "Since I Don't Have You."

Bay St. Louis area host families needed now

Foreign high school students are scheduled to arrive very soon for academic program homestays, and the sponsoring organization needs a few more local host families.

According to Pacific Inter-cultural Exchange (PIE) Executive Director John Doty, the students are all between 15 and 18 years, are English-speaking, have their own spending money, carry accident and health insurance, and are anxious to share their cultural experiences with their new American families.

PIE currently has programs to match almost every family's needs, ranging in length from a semester to a full academic year, where the students attend local high schools.

As there are no "typical" host families, PIE can fit a student into just about any situation, whether it be a single parent, a childless couple, a retired couple or a large family.

Families who host for PIE are also eligible to claim a $50 per month charitable contribution deduction on their itemized tax returns for each month they host a sponsored student.

Students come from Spain, Germany, Latvia, the former Soviet Union, Finland, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Paraguay, Australia, Sweden, Yugoslavia, China, Belgium, Vietnam and many other countries.

Doty encourages families to contact the program immediately as it will allow the proper time for the students and hosts to get to know one another before they actually meet for the first time.

Bay St. Louis area families interested in learning more about student exchange or arranging for a meeting with the community representative may call PIE at 1-800-631-1818.

The agency also has travel/study program opportunities available for American high school students as well as possibilities for community volunteers to assist and work with area host families, students and schools.

Free information about MS

Individuals with multiple sclerosis can receive free statewide referral information from the Multiple Sclerosis Association of America (MSAA). According to MSAA officials, information ranging from accessible van rentals to vocational training centers is available by calling 1-800-LEARN MS.

"People affected by MS often have questions on health care issues, home modifications, legal assistance, and insurance coverage," explained MSAA Patient Services Director Susan Freund.

"This service provides members with extensive information tailored to their state and, if possible, their local community. With this information, however, we always mention that MSAA does not endorse or recommend any referral."

In addition to referrals, MSAA provides members with counseling, support groups, free loan of medical equipment, publications, a lending library, and public awareness and advocacy.

Known as the crippler of young adults, multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system affecting as many as 500,000.

Symptoms range from blindness to loss of mobility and can vary in frequency and duration.

For information, call 1-800-LEARN MS or access www.msaa.com.

Bay St. Louis . . . early history

Georgette Hall
and Roland Weston

(Excerpted from the publication "Bay St. Louis, Mississippi, 1858-1958 Celebrating 100 Years of Incorporation.")

Nestled in what appears to be the curved arm of Mother Nature along the Gulf Coast lies the City of Bay St. Louis.

Just before the land touches the warm waters of Bay St. Louis from which the town gets its name, there is a ribbon of white beach which meets the ever present, ever moving and changeable waters of the Bay.

Just beyond the beach the city begins, shaded by large oaks draped with Spanish moss, tall stately pines and sycamores, and shrubs and flowers that enrich the surroundings and provide unusual, almost exotic, color during every season of the year.

The history and romance of this area have produced many questions which are frequently asked regarding the early, middle and late history of the Gulf Coast.

Who was the first European to set eyes or feet upon the lands that are washed by the Gulf of Mexico? What was his nationality and in what year did those things happen?

In 1394 to King John of Portugal and his queen, Philippa, a son was born who was to be known as Prince Henry the Navigator. As two older brothers stood between him and the throne Henry gave his attention almost exclusively to the study of the mathematical sciences and navigation.

Intending to devote his life to the exploration of the unknown lands and seas to the south, he erected an observatory and established a school of navigation and map-making.

In this school were trained the most intelligent, enterprising and daring navigators of Europe; and their discoveries under his tutelage and inspiration, startled the world. It was shortly before the year 1500 that Gaspar Cortereal under the patronage of the Portuguese throne sailed into the West presumably taking the course charted by Columbus.

When Gaspar and his men returned to Portugal a map of the new discoveries was made. This map shows for the first time the peninsula of Florida with a part of the Gulf Coast to the west.

It is believed by many historians that this map is sufficient proof that Gaspar shortly before 1500 was the discoverer of the Gulf Coast and that the Portuguese occupation of this area, although temporary and unofficial, antedated both the Spanish and French occupations by 200 years.

Other historians begin the explorations of this part of the Coast with Robert Cavalier de LaSalle who descended to the mouth of the Mississippi River and on April 7, 1682, reconnoitered the shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

In 1688 Tonti, the faithful friend of LaSalle, came as far as the Gulf to seek tidings of his lost leader.

Tonti examined the Coast 30 leagues towards Mexico and 25 leagues towards Florida. When Pierre le Moyne d'Iberville came to plant the Fleur de Lis of France on the Gulf Coast on April 12, 1699, he visited a bay about nine leagues from Ship Island to which he gave the name St. Louis, in memory of Louis IX of France, crusader and saint.

Finding the waters of the Bay very shallow, Iberville decided to place his settlement at Biloxi. Iberville only sounded the depths of the water, but his brother, Jean Baptiste le Moyne Bienville, set foot on the land and gave it its present name, on the Feast of St. Louis, August 25, 1699.

Pericault, the journalist from the frigate Le Marin writes of their adventures as follows:

"We shortly afterward found a beautiful bay about one league in width, by four in circumference, which was named Bay of St. Louis, because it was on the day of St. Louis that we arrived there."

"We hunted for three days, and killed 50 deer. Next day we camped at the entrance of Bay St. Louis near a fountain of water that flows down from the hills which Moyne Bienville named Belle Fontaine (now Pine Hills). We hunted several days around this Bay and filled our boats with venison, buffalo and other game."

The French explorers apparently found the Indians of this area to be friendly. They were Choctaws, by far the strongest tribe in Mississippi.

A fragment of this tribe had settled in Hancock County in the southern part near Bayou Philip.

They were full blooded Indians and called their village Chicapula, which means "bad grass," the name probably referring to the numerous rock-a-chaws which abounded in sections of the land.

In December 1799, d'Iberville placed a few families in Bay St. Louis with a sergeant and 15 men. On Jan. 3, 1721, two ships, La Gironde and La Volage arrived with about 300 persons for concessions of M. La Blanc and Court Bellville on the Yazoo River and Madame Mezieres on the Bay of St. Louis and Madame Chaumont on the Pascagoula Bay.

From the record of land grants it would appear that the colony of Madame Mezieres settled on a 17,084 acre grant north of Felicity Street. The colonists sent over by d'Iberville and Madame Mezieres were the pioneer settlers of Bay St. Louis.

The county remained under the French flag until 1763 when the settlement at the close of the Seven Years War (French and Indian War) gave it to Britain.

In 1793 at the close of the American Revolution, the land passed as West Florida to Spanish rule. In the fall of 1800, Spain secretly ceded Louisiana to Napoleon by the Treaty of San Ildefonso.

Spain, however, remained in actual possession of this territory. A diplomatic triple play was executed at New Orleans in the fall of 1803 when Louisiana went from Spain to France to the United States within a space of 20 days.

The first written records of habitation in Hancock County show that a land grant dated 1781 within the limits of the present city of Bay St. Louis was in the name originally of Philip Saucier.

The land passed later to Marshall and Joseph Nicaise. Another very early grant, adjoining the Philip Saucier-Nicaise grant and including the land on which the heart of the present City of Bay St. Louis is built was that of Madame Chorlo, also originating in 1781.

The one thing clear, is that Philip and John B. Saucier were the first residents of record in Bay St. Louis and the present Hancock County.

In 1807 there was a grant to Amos Burnett for the land on which was situated the old Indian village and is the site of the present city of Bay St. Louis.

Dedication of the bells

The bells for Our Lady of the Gulf Catholic Church were dedicated in 1908. The buildings pictured above have all been demolished, but the bells -- named "Joseph" and "Hugo," respectively, still hang in the church tower. The bells were donated from the Cotton Exchange Building in New Orleans.

on the Pearl River where Logtown now stands was granted a land claim in 1805. Simon Favre obtained a grant on Pearl River at a place called Napoleon, where he occupied the land and cultivated it in 1806.

He also had a claim on the same river lower down at a place now known as Nizan Landing, just above the present Logtown.

Ambrose Gaines, who received a land grant from the Spanish government in 1810 for land he had occupied and cultivated, call his village Gainesville, located at the head of navigation on the west branch of the Pearl River.

This village was once a busy and important lumber mill center, and a shipping point for cotton brought by wagon from as far away as Columbia.

Gainesville was also at one time the county seat of Hancock County.

There were two Jourdan brothers, Noel and John J., each of whom was granted two tracts of land.

Noel's land was on the Jourdan River, to which he gave his name. The Negroes have this confused with the River Jordan about which they sing and are very insistent about being baptized in or with its waters. John J. Jourdan's land was on Catahoula River, or Creek.

One of the most important land grants was the one given by the Spanish government to Thomas Shields. this grant was first given in 1789 to Onstantio Tardil, but it was not occupied and cultivated by him so his claim was invalidated.

The next year, 1790, Shields got possession of the land, but did not occupy it until 1800. This grant on the shore of Bay St. Louis was called Shieldsborough or Shieldsboro, by which Bay St. Louis and the former port of entry were called for many years.

West Florida came into the possession of the United States in 1810 and the Mississippi Coast was promptly divided into two districts, of which the western known as "Viloxi" included the territory between the Bay of Biloxi and Pearl River and between the 31st parallel and the Gulf of Mexico.

This section was formed into a county named Hancock, after John Hancock, president of the Continental Congress, on Dec. 14, 1812.

The present counties of Harrison, Stone and Pearl River have all been carved out of the old district as the original extent has been reduced by subsequent acts of the State Legislature to approximately one-fourth of the area.

On Feb. 15, 1841, the County of Harrison was formed and by another division, Feb. 22, 1890, Pearl River County was established.

When the War of 1812 loomed on the horizon, Hancock County, being organized that same year was in its infancy as a county but not as a part of the Mississippi Territory in the campaign against the British because all of the war activities, other than the Battle of New Orleans, took place in the Mississippi Territory and especially on the south coast.

It was in 1810 that the American settlers again took up arms against Spain for possession of this southern territory.

President Madison ordered Governor Claiborne to occupy and hold the district and on Dec. 7, Claiborne took possession of the district, exclusive of Mobile.

Claiborne sent Dr. William Flood to organize the parishes of Biloxi and Pascagoula. On the banks of the Pearl River, Flood chose Simon Favre to act a justice of the peace.

He then moved to Bay St. Louis where he commissioned Philip Saucier, who had grown in influence.

Mississippi soldiers signing in Hancock County were known throughout the war as the 18th Regiment which was a part of the famous 155th, then known as Fist Mississippi.

The direct result was of great importance to Mississippi Territory and to the present state as in this way frontage on the Gulf was secured. The flag of the United States was raised over the Bay on Jan. 11, 1811.

There were six "watering places" developed on the Gulf Coast before 1860. They were Shieldsborough or Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian, Mississippi City, Biloxi, Ocean Springs and Pascagoula.

Weekly excursions to the watering places made it possible for those forced to remain in New Orleans during the week to enjoy something of resort life on the weekends.

On the fourth of July organizations such as military companies and fire departments came in masses.

The selection here to spend the summer was personal. On New Orleans paper put it, "Here is the difficulty -- to select, among so many pleasant and desirable places, all having peculiar advantages and characteristics."

The Bay of St. Louis was named for Louis IX of France on whose birthday it was discovered by Bienville in 1699.

Thomas Shield secured a grant from the Spanish Government for part of this area.

By 1814 a village known as Shieldsboro on the west side of the Bay was the summer resort of Natchez planters, and during the 1820's and 1830's it grew in favor with the up country planters.

Involved land titles in the area gave rise to much litigation that employed numerous lawyers.

Of the location Timothy Flint wrote that "It is swept by cool breezes of the Gulf, and though it has not always been exempted from the yellow fever, is a famed resort for the inhabitants of New Orleans during the sickly months."

The Bay of St. Louis Hotel at Shieldsborough was advertised in 1839 by its owner J. St. Cyr. Board was $60 per month. In 1842 this "establishment" and well known retreat was opened by Edward Milford and Angusters McDonald.

They pointed out that in attractions for families... "the hotel at Bay St. Louis has claims for possess. Its fine and abundant shade -- its excellent drives -- a retired resort on the grounds for children and nurses to amuse and recreate themselves -- the coolness of the water -- the superiority of bathing and washing arrangements -- all contributed to make this house a place of very desirable resort."

Rates were $35 a month, $10 a week, $2 a day with children and servants half price. The editor of the New Orleans Daily Picayune, visiting Bay St. Louis in August 1842, reported "fishing and fine bathing, good eating and drinking, music and dancing, bowling and pistol shooting, billiards, et cetera, contribute some of the amusements and enjoyments at the Bay St. Louis Hotel.

"But these things are not the only attraction at Milfords. There are lots of beautiful and interesting ladies, who complete the galaxy of splendid attractions now at this desirable resort. Indeed Bay St. Louis is a right pleasant place."

Even with the scattered and incomplete records Bay St. Louis was quite a busy center during the Civil War. No battles were fought here but the Coast was carefully guarded and there were many activities among the citizens for the comfort of the soldiers.

Occasionally raids were made and horses and cattle were stolen, and sometimes chickens to satisfy Union soldiers' craving for chicken dinners.

There were no plantations to destroy and no homes were burned. This section suffered little from raids. The only privation that the citizens suffered was a scarcity of salt, sugar and coffee.

Colonel Dan B. Seal, a native of Hancock County at the outbreak of the Civil War, recruited what was known as the "Hancock Rebels" made up of men from the county and known in history as Company C.

To John V. Tulme, another man who figures prominently in the early history of the county and city, is given the credit for organizing the "Shieldsboro Rifles." These men were recruited in Bay St. Louis and saw service in the long war between the States.

There was also the "Shieldsboro Dragons" which was a cavalry company organized in 1861 and fought the whole length of the war.

The act organizing the county specifies no county seat. It was provided by an act passed Feb. 2, 1825, that sessions of the county courts be held part of the year in Bay St. Louis and part in Pearlinton, and that the use of either jail for the confinement of prisoners was left to the discretion of the sheriff.

Court was also held two or three times a year at a place called Center, somewhere near the present Caesar. Later the town of Gainesville on the Pearl River was the county seat.

Fire destroyed the courthouse Apr. 1, 1853 and the county seat was subsequently moved to Bay St. Louis. In 1860 the county seat moved to Bay St. Louis.

Bay St. Louis is the name by which the settlement was originally known. Later it was called Shieldsboro and both names were used for many years.

The Mayor and Board of Aldermen at their first meeting Jan. 4, 1858, attempted to clarify the matter by incorporating the city under the name of the city of Shieldsborough.

this evidently did not meet with the general approbation, so on March 2, 1875, the first name was restored, and the city was incorporated as the City of Bay St. Louis.

The city is situated in Hancock County on the Mississippi Gulf Coast in the extreme southwest corner of Mississippi adjacent to Louisiana where Pearl River forms the dividing line.

It is bounded on the east by Jourdan River and on the south by waters of the Gulf of Mexico. Oysters, salt water fish, shrimp, and crabs abound in the waters of the Gulf and draw fishermen from all parts of the world. Excellent highways lead into the county and approximately 170 miles of paved roadways within the county are excellent for travel and transportation.

It is interesting to note that by 1880 there were many businesses which thrived in the community. Mr. J. B. Toulme had a leather factory where he employed seven men and utilized over 10,000 pounds of leather per year.

Mr. A. A. Ulman had a woolen mill on Nicholson Avenue which was capitalized at $40,000. He had 54 people employed and paid a total of $14,000 in wages per year.

Mr. Ulman also had a smaller leather factory in the neighborhood of Bay St. Louis where he employed six men and paid total wages of $2,000 per year.

The V. & H. Landrheu Company had a brick yard of $1,500 value and they employed three men at $1.25 per day.

Mr. A. F. Cazanave had a leather factory where he employed eight men working 11 hours per day. Their wages were $1.12 per day.

There were a number of saw mills in the neighborhood. B. S. Besson had a mill that cut two million feet of lumber per year and he employed 10 men.

Mr. Wm. S. Keel had a mill which cut one million and eight hundred thousand per year and employed 12 men at $1 per day.

Wherever the French explorers unfurled their banner, they planted at the same time the Cross of Christ.

Along with d'Iberville's very first expedition to the Coast were two priests, Father Athanasius Douay and Father Bordenave. The pioneer settlers of Bay St. Louis were all of the Catholic faith.

Reverend Louis Stanislaus Mary Buteux was appointed first pastor of Bay St. Louis on July 31, 1847. He was also confided by the Suplican Bishop Chanche at Natchez the communities of Pass Christian, Pearl River, Jourdan River and Wolf River, and as far as 20 to 25 miles to the north.

Father Buteux reached Bay St. Louis Aug. 8 and stopped at the Grand Hotel conducted by Mr. J. B. Toulme. On Aug. 15, the Feast of the Assumption, he offered what he called the first Mass.

The service was conducted at the Courthouse. On Sept. 15, just before he started Mass, the deed for the property on which he was to build the church arrive.

On March 26, 1848, he held the celebration for the laying of the cornerstone of the new church. Bishop Chanche blessed the church Aug. 19 1849, and Bishop Blanc of New Orleans honored the Bay with his presence.

That night there was still another ceremony performed by Bishop Blanc -- the blessing of the bells, which were named for Mary and Joseph.

Following in the consecrated and dedicated footsteps of Father Buteux was Rev. Henry Leduc who was appointed pastor of Bay St. Louis on Nov. 17, 1859.

For nearly 38 years he spent his energies at this assignment. It is true that when he arrived in Bay St. Louis, he found a church, a rectory, an academy for girls and a school for boys, but these projects were all in their infancy.

Following the difficulties of the Civil War, Father LeDuc decided to construct a bell tower as the original church built by Father Buteux had no bell tower, or a very small one.

In 1868 the tower was completed and a bell weighing 1,540 pounds was installed. Father LeDuc dedicated the Cemetery of St. Mary on Dec. 22, 1872.

It was during the next few years that the good priest became keenly aware that the old church was falling into ruin and had to be rebuilt.

He got word to Bishop Elder who granted permission for the work to begin and also granted a loan to complete the construction.

The new magnificent structure was nearly completed by February of 1877.

Thirty years later on Nov. 16, 1907, the church was destroyed by fire.

However, visitors coming to Bay St. Louis today will see the new Our Lady of the Gulf Catholic Church which rises in glory on the same spot where rests the ashes of the old one.

Little known, but recently brought to light are interesting facts on the ending of the War of 1812. The British Fleet with all its mighty strength sailed in from the open waters of the Gulf of Mexico headed for the harbor of the Bay of St. Louis.

Spotting inhabitants on the island of Cat, a tiny island about six miles off shore from the town of Bay St. Louis, they dropped anchor.

The British were seeking a water route to New Orleans. Had they succeeded immediately in their quest, the tide of battle would have been turned, with victory for the British instead of the American forces, as Andrew Jackson would not have yet arrived to fortify the city, and the famous Battle of Chalmette could not have been fought as it was.

The loss of this battle could have been the means of the English defeating the Americans in the war and reclaiming this vast land for the crown.

The inhabitants spotted on the island were guests of the City of New Orleans, a Spanish Grandee, Don Juan Cuevas, Official Emissary from the Court of Spain.

An ardent hunter and fisherman (the island was filled with thousands of small game resembling cats.). Don Cuevas with his retinue of servants and slaves was enjoying a hunting and fishing expedition.

The Spanish don was invited aboard the English Flagship and requested to give information on the water route to New Orleans.

Being a gentleman of honor who would not betray his hosts, he refused to divulge this information, and he and his entire household were thrown into chains and kept prisoners aboard ship while the British foundered around the coast seeking an entry route to the strategic city.

The thousands of inlets and bayous of this territory made it impossible without charts to easily learn the correct route, and so while time was lost by the British, the American troops in New Orleans were reinforced by General Jackson and the men from Tennessee.

Thomas Shields

1783-1827

From 1699 until 1803, the settlement on the west bank of the Bay of St. Louis was known as Bay Bay St. Louis. The land had been a Spanish land grant to Constantin Tardil in 1789. Since Tardil did not occupy the site, it was awarded to Thomas Shields in 1790.

It is known that a Thomas Shields occupied it in 1800. Historians believe this was the father of the man for whom the settlement was later named, since the son was only age seven at the time.

Shields married Ellen Blanchard Ker in 1816 at Shieldsboro/Bay St. Louis. The town was known then by both names. While Shields owned a home on Front Street at the site of today's Chessy's Art and Antiques, he spent little time there. According to the 1820 Census, Shields and his family lived in St. Tammany Parish, La. and by 1823 were residents of New Orleans.

In 1818 Shieldsboro was officially designated a town by that name and remained so until 1875 when the legislature changed it to Bay St. Louis. According to American State Papers, it was recorded in 1820 that Congress declined to ratify the Spanish land grant awarded to Shields.

Minor disputes over the title continued until the 1920s when the land was awarded to a resort complex. Our search failed to uncover the location of this complex. But it is known that no heirs claimed the land.

The name of Shields lives on in local descendants as well as historical references and a mini-shopping center called Shieldsboro Square. Also, during World War II, a Navy destroyer was christened Purser Shields. In his day, Shields served as Purser of the Navy in New Orleans.

Born in Delaware, Shields joined the U.S. Navy in 1804 as a midshipman and by 1808 he was stationed in Baltimore angling for a purser job. He plied important people with letters pleading for their support.

In a letter to Gabriel Duvall, Comptroller of the Navy, Shields cited "the unavoidable expenses which I am compelled to be at, through the highness of boarding &c, (etc.) and my inability to meet it by any other means but that arising from my slender pay as midshipman, induces me to solicit your influence in the opportunity so offered."

In another plea: "I have heretofore studiously avoided any recurrence to the subject of promotions. It is however, My Dear Sir, grating to see juniors wearing Epaulets. Mr. Rogers who is recruiting in this station is one of those. May I not calculate on your friendship?"

His campaign succeeded. In April of 1812 his commission was confirmed by the U.S. Senate, and Shields was dispatched to New Orleans to serve as purser, the only shore-based position he was to hold during his Navy career except a brief wartime sortie.

The Battle of Lake Borgne in the War of 1812 found Shields aboard ship together with Dr. R. Morrell, Surgeon of the Navy, sent by Gen. Patterson with a flag of truce to negotiate the freedom of American prisoners held on British gunboats. The British refused the request, and Shields and Morrell returned to New Orleans. On Jan. 19, 1815, Shields left the city with a few well-armed boats to join the fray in Lake Borgne. The next day he boarded a British ship and captured its 40-member crew. The following day he captured a transport boat and a 10-ton schooner and three small boats.

In 1818, Shields was summoned to Washington to "render his accounts from 1811 to 1818. It is presumed he can account for the full amount standing in his debt of $98,514.30. The amount of his pay since March 1821 is to be deducted from this balance."

In 1823 Shields was granted a nine-month leave of absence to go to Honduras to "pursue a claim, the proceeds of which he wanted to apply to liquidation of his accounts."

But in September 1828, the navy reported his debt at $98,417.30 even though in April 1827, Shields was given a twelve-month leave to go to Mexico. The navy's records note "the trip to Mexico has the same purpose as the one to Honduras because of having been unable to go assay on account of his finances."

In 1826, responding to a request for information for a Shields Memorial, R.Y. Hayne, Chairman of the Senate-Committee of Naval Affairs, wrote:

"It appears by the files of this Office that in the settlement of Mr. Shields's accounts in 1821, his own statement exhibited a balance due to the United States of $81,047.57. In this statement, however, certain errors existed and certain sums were charged by Mr. Shields which according to the rules of Settlement of this office were not allowed, and which raise the balance as stated to be $98,314.30. The difference between these two sums is principally made up of overpayments to dead men and deserters, and of stores lost by conflagration and capture by the British during the late war. Besides these two principal items, there are rejected charges for clerk hire, travelling expenses and house rent, making in the whole, the sum of $16,395.54 for which, perhaps, though the strict rules of Law by which this office is governed, in the settlement of accounts, prohibit any allowance, Mr. Shields is entitled upon the principals of Equity to a credit. Should this sum be allowed to him, the balance against him will be reduced to $81,918.76. No other demands [exist] for credit on the part of Mr. Shields."

The chairman also felt that some of Shields's problems could result from paying for provisions out of his own pocket.

"...during the war, public agents and disbursing officers found it extremely difficult to procure either funds or credit on their public responsibilities and unless their private means were resorted to, the public service was much inconvenienced," Hayne wrote. "At this period Mr. Shields was a man of fortune and of extensive credit, with high and chivalric feelings of patriotism, which would have led him to have used his own pecuniary resources, with the same promptitude and high minded carelessness of forms, with which he had actually hazarded his life, when he thought the interests of his country required it."

"The untarnished reputation of Mr. Shields for moral integrity forbids the suspicion that any part of the large balance against him could have accrued from an illegal or improper diversion of the public funds to his own use or emolument. But it is highly probable that much of it may have arisen from the neglect, dishonesty, or wastefulness of those Subordinate Agents to whom he was compelled to entrust the management of his concerns...several officers who were then serving on that station, the Purser, Stewards and Agents were frequently called upon to perform Military duty and that while they were so engaged...the warehouses and stores in which provisions and other public effects were deposited, were left without protection and exposed to pillage and depredation. It cannot be doubted that public property to a large amount, with which Mr. Shields was charged and is now held responsible, was thus wasted or stolen without slightest ground of imputation resting either upon his integrity or vigilance."

In 1822 the Secretary of the Navy authorized a payment to Shields of $1,693.10 to cover the loss "occasioned by burning the public storehouse at the Bay of St. Louis by order of Lt. Jones, commanding the naval force of the U.S. stationed at that point during the invasion of the enemy in the winter of 1814."

Shields died in 1827, leaving his debt behind. In 1839, the navy sued John K. Smith, one of his surety bondsmen and won a $25,000 judgment in federal court in Louisiana for the penalty on the debt. No action was taken against Shields's heirs, called "utterly insolvent as was also John K. Smith." In another suit in Maryland against a second bondsman, George Stiles, the navy won a $25,000 judgment.

Shields, who pleaded for the job of purser citing his inability to live on a midshipman's pay, accumulated properties "all over, including Mexico, Honduras and South America," according to a descendant. Why he left a large unpaid debt to the U.S. Navy is not revealed in available documents.

In 1842 Shields's name was deleted from the published list of debtors.

The Battle of Bay St. Louis

"War having been declared by the United States against Great Britain, our volunteers had been principally engaged in severe conflicts with the Creek Indians, led by Gen. Claiborne of Natchez, and Gen. Ripley of this county," said J.F.H. Claiborne in his Fourth of July speech in 1876 in Bay St. Louis.

"Two regiments of United States troops, under Gen. Ripley, that had long been stationed here (near the present mansion of our public-spirited fellow citizen, Alfred Ulman, Esq.) and had recruited into its ranks a number of our residents, had left for Canada."

Contemporary accounts cite the assumption of the U.S. leadership that the War of 1812 would be fought on our northern boundary.

A December 5, 1814 letter signed only "N" was sent from Pensacola to Commodore Daniel T. Patterson, commanding the U.S. Naval station at New Orleans. The writer warned of a British fleet of 80 warships and a large body of troops that arrived at Pensacola from the West Indies on the 4th and had as its object an attack on New Orleans.

Responding to this threat to the city, Patterson sent five gunboats, a tender and dispatch boat toward the passes Mariana and Christiana under the command of Thomas Catesby Jones with orders to make a stand at the Rigolets and sink the enemy or be sunk.

Lieutenant Jones sent two gunboats to go as far as Dauphin Island where they found the British advance scouts Armide and Sophie.

Vice Admiral Cochrane, commanding the British expedition, reported from the Armide off Cat Island that two gunboats fired upon the Armide but couldn't sustain the action and turned around and joined three other gunboats off Biloxi. Cochrane intended to anchor at Isle au Vaisseau (Ship Island) and send troops in small boats to Bayou Castellan (or des Pecheurs) at the head of Lake Borgne.

British Rear Admiral Malcolm came up to the fleet on the 11th and anchored between Cat and Ship Island, and Jones retired to Pass Mariana and next day off Bay St. Louis, obeying orders to avoid being cut off from the Rigolets. Cochrane, on the 12th, put the vessels under the command of Capt. Locklear of the Sophie, aided by Captains Montessor and Roberts, against Jones who then determined to take station near the Malheureux (unfortunate) islands. About 2 p.m. on the 13th, the British boats were at Pass Christian. The water was so low because of westerly wind, that three of the gunboats could not get afloat, even by throwing overboard all that could be spared, until floodtide at 3:30.

Three of the British boats entered Bay St. Louis to cut off the schooner Seahorse that Jones had sent in to remove the stores deposited there. A few shots drove the barges out of range, but they were reinforced by four others, and the attack renewed.

Sailing-master Johnson of the Seahorse was supported in the fight by a shore battery of two 6-pounders, and after a sharp action of 30 minutes, the enemy drew off, with one boat damaged and several men killed or wounded. But it was necessary at 7:30 to blow up the schooner and burn the storehouse.

Claiborne, in his patriotic speech, said that a regiment of militia from the interior had been stationed in Bay St. Louis for several days to oppose the landing of the enemy.

"They had two pieces of cannon in position. When the British flotilla approached to cut off the Seahorse, the militia became nervous and began to break ranks," Claiborne said.

"Most of our citizens were on the bluff, and an invalid lady from Natchez exclaimed, 'My God, Colonel, fire one for the honor of the country!'"

"The gallant colonel probably did not hear these words, for he was rapidly retiring, followed by the bulk of his men and their first halt was at the Big-spring beyond Ho-bo-li-chitto.

"The lady called for a light. The late John B. Toulme, then a youth, courteously handed his cigarette, and she discharged the cannon amidst the plaudits of our people.

"A number of our young men, led by Mr. Toulme, who know the route through the marshes and bayous, went in pirogues with their rifles and took part in the defense of New Orleans."

Jones, in his final report to his superiors in 1815, "after having sufficiently recovered my strength," described the events of December 1814.

"At 3:45, the enemy dispatched three boats to cut out the schooner Seahorse, which had been sent into the Bay St. Louis that morning to assist in the removal of the public stores, which I had previously ordered. There finding a removal impractical, I ordered preparations to be made for their destruction lest they fall into the enemy's hands. A few discharges of grape-shot from the Seahorse compelled the three boats, which had attacked her, to retire out of reach of her gun, until they were joined by four others when the attack was recommenced by the seven boats. Mr. Johnson having chosen an advantageous position near the two six-pounders mounted on the bank, maintained a sharp action for near 30 minutes. The enemy hauled off, having one boat apparently much injured, and with the loss of several men killed and wounded. At 7:30, an explosion at the bay, and soon after a large fire, induced me to believe the Seahorse was blown up and the public storehouse set on fire, which has proven to be the fact."

While Jones drove the British from Bay St. Louis, the adversaries engaged in battle in the Mississippi Sound off the Malheureux islands the next day.

Jones continued, "About 1 a.m. on the 14th, the wind having entirely died away, and our vessels became unmanageable, came to anchor in the west end of Malheureux island's passage. At daylight next morning, still a perfect calm, the enemy's flotilla was about nine miles from us at anchor, but soon got in motion and rapidly advanced on us."

Jones' account continued with details of the two adversaries maneuvering their vessels for confrontation. In the ensuing battle, Jones was wounded and forced to turn over command to George Parker, master's mate. The action continued "with unabating severity until 40 minutes past 12 o'clock when it terminated with the surrender of no. 23, all the other vessels having previously fallen into the hands of the enemy."

"In this unequal contest our loss in killed and wounded has been trifling

On November, 16, 1907, the Sea Coast Echo reported that a "conflagration originating from unknown causes destroyed a business portion of Bay St. Louis [on Front Street], including St. Joseph's Academy and Church of Our Lady of the Gulf. Losses will reach $250,000."

One of the first resorts

The Pickwick Hotel, which catered to Bay St. Louis' burgeoning tourism industry, burned in 1907, then was rebuilt and dedicated in the spring of 1908. The site is now home to the Fire Dog Saloon and Court Street antiques.

on the first floor and the second floor by the Cumberland Telephone Company's central exchange; the King's Daughters Library; the offices of Dr. R. J. Turner; and Mrs. Planchet's residence.

A later report by the Daily Record-Tribune of Gulfport notes the loss of Evans Drug Store, an annex to the Clifton Hotel, a fruit stand, Miss Josie Welch's Book Store and a number of private dwelling. The fire extended to the corner of Union Street before it was under control.

"The Bay is supplied with a very poor fire fighting apparatus and still poorer system of water works," the newspaper reported. "It was only the wide sweep of open country between the bank and the Pickwick Hotel that kept the latter from going also."

The Opera House, recently built at a cost of $12,000, was "said to be insured for about $4,000," the report continues. "The Merchants Bank [which survived] was completed about six months ago of brick and cost $10,000. The Convent consisted of several buildings worth in the neighborhood of $18,000 to $20,000. The Church...and the rectory cost about $20,000."

Cecil B. DeMille was among the famous artists who performed at Osoinach's Opera house.

Crossing the Bay

In 1928 the ferry across the Bay of St. Louis was replaced with the wooden bridge, built at a cost of $752,610 of creosoted pilings and timber.

This project, spearheaded by Horatio S. Weston of Logtown, then president of the Board of Supervisors, transformed Bay St. Louis from an independent and isolated resort town to the open western portal of the entire Mississippi Gulf Coast. The ancient ferry had chugged laboriously between Bay St. Louis and Henderson Point.

Weather and tide played a deciding role in its schedule and many times caused travelers long delays.

Not even the $7 million steel and concrete toll bridge, opened 25 years later was as important as the first highway bridge across the Bay.

Water in the Bay of St. Louis is comparatively shallow, rarely more than 10 feet deep at normal tide.

Maintenance dredging in recent years has assured an open channel for shipping vessels, sailboats and most recently, a large casino barge, to pass through the channel.

And, of course, the original design included the open span, at times an inconvenience to motorists, but free passage to vessels.

compared to that of the enemy," Jones wrote. He appended a roster of the five gunboats captured by the British, with their force of 42 launches and barges with large cannon and three gigs carrying small arms plus about 1,000 troops.

Losses included 6 Americans killed and 35 wounded; the British 17 killed and 77 wounded.

While the British won this skirmish, the action in the Bay of Saint Louis and the Sound caused a delay in the attack on New Orleans, enabling Gen. Andrew Jackson to raise a force sufficient to win the Battle of New Orleans.

In its account of the War of 1812, the Encyclopedia Britannica concludes:

"The America Navy was but a puny adversary of the British Navy, which has captured or shut up in port all other navies of Europe. But the small number of American vessels, with the superabundance of trained officers, gave them one great advantage: the training and discipline of the men, and the equipment of the vessels had been brought to the highest point.

"The art of handling and fighting the old broadside sailing frigate had been carried in the little American Navy to an excellence with unvarying success... Altogether the American vessels gave a remarkably good account of themselves."

Thumbnail history, Hancock County Courthouse

Hancock County was established in 1812. Five years later, in 1817, the first courthouse was built at Center, which later became Caesar. The county government remained there for 20 years until the courthouse and county seat were moved to Gainesville in 1837.

The county seat remained at Gainesville for more than 15 years. When the Gainesville courthouse burned in 1853, the county seat was moved to Shieldsborough.

The wooden courthouse, built in 1866 at Shieldsborough, served for 45 years.

In 1910, W. S. Weston was president of the Board of Supervisors, and S. J. Craft, J. E. Smith, T. J. McArthur and L. C. Bourgeois were "associate members."

A. J. Carver was sheriff, and E. H. Hoffman clerk.

In July, plans submitted by Keenan & Weiss, New Orleans architects, were approved for building a new courthouse "not to exceed the sums of $25,000."

Jett Bros. Contracting Co. of Alabama won the contracts for construction with a bid of $24,989, which included granite steps at $650.

However, before construction started, the plans were changed to eliminate the fire escapes, at a saving of $60.

Napoleon Caron was low bidder for moving the old courthouse out of the way. His bid, to move the building and vault 76 feet to the east side of the grounds, was $650.

John Henry, only applicant for the job, was hired as construction superintendent with compensation set at two percent of the cost.

The contract with Jett Brothers was signed Aug. 1, 1910, with contract time eight months.

Actual starting date is uncertain, but first payment under the contract, for $3,120, was made Oct. 4, 1910.

Although the courthouse was paid for from the general county fund, the supervisors on Dec. 6, 1910, borrowed $10,000 from Hancock Bank. They issued five warrants of $2,000 each, payable one each year for five years.

The courthouse was formally accepted by the board on Sept. 20, 1911. John Henry was employed to move the safe and furniture from the old building into the new. Jett Brothers was paid $50 for placing a marble cornerstone containing the names of the supervisors, and Alzono B. Hayden provided "sundry articles for the toilet room" for $28.

Napoleon Caron bought the old courthouse at auction for $150, and the pickets and posts from the fence around the courthouse grounds were sold to J. E. Saucier for $5.

To complete the transition, the following were purchased for court and jury rooms: Three dozen chairs, four dozen cuspidors, two dozen sheets and a dozen each of single beds, mattresses, pillows and blankets.

(Compiled by Jim Pfeiffer for the Hancock County Board of Supervisors.)

A fight for light

An 1899 contract to install street lights in Bay St. Louis was not a welcome bit of progress to all its citizens.

Indeed, the strongest opposition came from none other than the district's U.S. Congressman, who won a court injunction for the removal of poles, wires and lights, arguing that they led to "disfigurement of the view" from his several properties on Beach Boulevard (then called Front Street), "and a considerable element of their value which consists of an open and unobstructed view of the Mississippi Sound."

The Honorable Eaton J. Bowers, attorney, publisher of the Gulf Coast Progress, Mississippi Democratic presidential elector (who cast his vote for Grover Cleveland), state senator from 1896 to 1898, four-term U.S. Congressman from 1902 until 1910, was a leading citizen of Bay St. Louis who owned four pieces of property on both sides of Front Street, including his home at 402 North Beach Boulevard.

The municipal authorities had contracted with Gulf Coast Ice and Manufacturing Company on Dec. 21, 1899. The firm erected poles on and "along the streets of the city, attached wires and other necessary appliances for lighting the streets with electricity and inaugurated and put in operation an electric light plant, which lighted the streets of the city in conformity with their contract," according to court documents of the day.

Bowers won an injunction that required Gulf Coast to remove the electrical poles and equipment, charging that they were "erected along the streets abutting his properties without his consent, and to his great injury and annoyance."

The injunction was later modified to an order to put everything back, but the local court refused to enforce it.

Gulf Coast had no choice but to appeal to the Mississippi Supreme Court.

The court ruled that "The authorities are quite uniform that a city or town may light its streets as a means of making them more safe and convenient for public travel."

The right to light the town is presumed to have been acquired and paid for... the taking of the land for use as a street includes not only the right of passage, but of securing a convenient and safe passage, to light it, if you please, for that

It is not a new taking of property for public use, but a completing to that extent of the use of the first taking.

"The proprietary rights of landowners... are greatly modified by the rights of the public, which is entitled to a free passage over the streets, and to the benefit of lights constructed and operated for that end.

"It is said the poles and wires... are unsightly, and are a disfigurement of the property, and an especial injury in that it obstructs the open view of the sea," the justices wrote. "Similar erections in all cities and towns present, though perhaps to a lesser degree, like inconvenience to the owners of palatial residences..."

The first trains come to Bay

Plans for the 140-mile New Orleans and Mobile Division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad were laid in the early 1850s.

The first surveyor of the route, Col. A.A. Dexter, died after completing plans for the first 120 miles, from Mobile to Chef Menteur. M&N.O. President C.J. McRae repaced him with Lewis Troost.

Troost recommended a route going southwest from Mobile to Pascagoula where the first marine obstacle was encountered: the split of the Pascagoula River into twin streams that enter the Gulf about three miles apart. Along the rail route, the area between the forks consisted of sea marsh terrain, requiring extensive fill work as well as drawbridges.

Fourteen miles west, the route faced the 6,500-foot wide Biloxi Bay, which would require a long trestle and drawspan. The next major Gulf inlet was two-mile wide St. Louis Bay, calling for drawbridge with trestle.

The new rail route crossed into Louisiana near the point where the Pearl River empties into the Gulf, then proceeded along the thin tongue of land that appears to separate Lake Pontchartrain from the Gulf. However, the area between the Pearl River and New Orleans, described as land, is really a 30-mile strip of saltwater marsh barely above sea level.

Before the final route was selected, Troost considered an inland alignment skirting the three major Gulf inlets in Mississippi. This route did not pass through the thriving coastal towns, and also it would have required heavier grades and more curvature than the coastal route. Although the chosen route went where the people were and had virtually no grades or curvature, Troost knew it was far more vulnerable to the nemesis of shipworm and storms.

While the original route was chosen under the aegis of the Mobile & New Orleans Railroad, construction of the line was undertaken by a new corporate entity, the New Orleans, Mobile & Chattanooga Railroad.

Ceremonial groundbreaking took place at Mobile in 1867, but construction did not begin until February 3, 1869, under the direction of Chief Engineer Henry Van Vleck. Among the original construction contracts were those for 400,000 cross-ties, 2.6 million cubic yards of earthwork, 4,500 feet of truss bridge and 25,000 feet of pile and trestle bridging. Also, there were four iron pivot bridges for Pascagoula River, Biloxi Bay, St. Louis Bay and Rigolets Pass.

By the end of 1869, more than 80 miles of track had been finished. The entire line from Mobile to New Orleans was completed in 20 months.

In April 1871, the M&NO's name was changed to the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railway Co., reflecting plans to continue on to Houston.

Despite financial problems, the NOM&T did pioneer work in timber preservation. But the treated pilings driven into the bays of Biloxi and St. Louis were destroyed by shipworm within nine months. The railroad then sent J.W. Putnam to England to study the new creosoting process. After his return in 1874, he rebuilt the Gautier plant for the treatment of timber by forcing the oil under pressure into heated wood. Piles so treated lasted for several decades.

By the 1900s, creosoting was used to prevent any kind of decay to crossties and telephone poles, as well as bridge supports. Parker Lamb, reprinted from materials published by the Hancock County Historical Society.)

Hancock's first hospital on Main Street

In 1927 a local circle of International Order, Kings Daughters and Sons was formed in Hancock County.

The following year the group started the first emergency hospital in the upper story of the home of Dr. D.H. Ward on Main Street.

Later, a larger house was rented and the hospital stayed until an even larger house on Carroll Avenue was bought and equipped.

Kings Daughters continued to run the hospital through 1957. In 1958 it reopened as Hancock County Hospital, financed by about $300,000 in Hill-Burton federal funds.

The modern structure on Dunbar Avenue served the county until it was replaced by today's Hancock Medical Center on Drinkwater Road.

The Bay's early movie houses

Our first picture show was Bay Pictorium, opened in 1905 on the water side of Front Street, now Beach Boulevard, opposite today's State Street. Its owner/operator, W. A. Sigerson, advertised "a change of moving pictures daily, beautiful illustrated song, a first class electric theatre with admission of a nickel but on Vaudeville nights, admission of a dime." On Wednesdays and Saturdays candy was given away.

Bay Pictorium had an air dome built over the water and people sat on bleachers out in the open. The management furnished an insect repellent called Sweet Dreams.

In case of rain, patrons moved inside, the projector was reversed, and the Keystone Cops didn't miss a beat.

Sigerson sold Bay Pictorium to Octave Fayard who operated it until it burned in 1913. The building was valued at $2,700.

In spring 1914, the first of three A&G movie houses opened on that site under the management of Geraldine Ames and Philomene Gaspard.

The following summer, after a successful season, a pavilion was added, another "air dome" without walls or roof.

Before long, both were rebuilt and converted to one large building which served up silent pictures for about six years.

In 1927 the brick building housing the new A&G, designed by architect William T. Nolan, was constructed across Front Street.

Its two stories in the 42 x 126 building seated 1,000 and included a gallery, one half of which was available to black patrons. A 1927 fire was halted at the brick wall.

The A&G, vacant and unused today except for occasional vendors of snowballs from the old ticket office, is a piece of local history designated in the National Register of Historic Places as follows:

"1927. Spanish Colonial Revival. One-story brick building with 2-story false front. Shaped and stepped parapet with ball finials. Recessed Central entrance."

The parapet housed the broad copper marquee lighted by electricity "and protecting its patrons against inclement weather conditions, at all times permitting them to drive up in their automobiles beneath its bounteous shade," said an admiring Sea Coast Echo reporter in the special edition dedicated to the opening of this grand attraction at the intersection of Front and State streets, which cost $60,000.

The interior boasted ornamented plaster, beam ceilings in barrel design, lighted by electricity in set conduits, "making it impossible for a fire to occur. It is cooled by two arctic new air machines driving by electric motors thus providing comfort to the patrons even in the hottest seasons," said the Echo.

A&G's first operator was Richard Boudreaux; its organist Mrs. R. Bleu.

So enamored was the Echo of this bright new addition to the community that it dubbed the A&G "a thing of beauty and a joy forever," perhaps not what the poet Keats had in mind.

The Bay's other picture show was the Ortte, opened in the mid-1940's in a building on Beach Boulevard at Washington Street that housed a number of famous establishments in its day.

Originally August Keller's dry goods store built in 1894 after a fire destroyed his earlier store, the structure was bought in 1921 by the group that re-organized the Bay-Waveland Yacht Club.

The club founded after a couple of years until its leaders staged a dance in the building in 1930, inspiring one of its members, Charles A. Breath Sr. to acquire the building for a night club.

In the 30s, Keller's old store became Uncle Charlie's Night Club, a lively gathering place in front of which yacht races were held.

In the mid 1940s, Ed Ortee, who owned several movie houses, bought the building and opened the Ortee Theatre, which operated until 1955 when Joseph Scafide bought it and changed its name to the Star.

The Star changed hands in 1975 when Kelvin Schulz bought it and continued to show films and stage community theater plays until 1984.

Mr. Schulz operates Big E Grocery in part of the building. Edith Back

Bay began Coast's first community theater

Bay St. Louis Little Theater, organized by local talent in 1946, produced its plays for the first two years in the auditorium of Bay High School on Second Street.

In 1948, the group bought a lot on Boardman Avenue and two army surplus barracks which were joined into a Tshaped building and painted barn-red.

The Boardman Avenue Playhouse is still the home of the Bay's community theater, whose devotees insist that it is one month older than Gulfport Little Theater, which also vies for the title of first community theater on the Coast.

Ferry Dust

The Drackett Line Bay St. Louis/Henderson Point Ferry at the DeMontluzin Street Dock operated until 1928.
